Shows How Flames Can Be Put Out By Tone Vibrations of Whistle, Violin

Who's loony now? Charles Kellogg, inventor, is demonstrating a method of extinguishing fire by tone vibrations. It is declared that he can put out a gas flame by whistling in a high pitch, and smother a flame by drawing a violin bow over a tuning fork. Physicists are investigating his remarkable discovery, which he is seen demonstrating to Boston firemen.

SPORTS DONE BROWN

BY NORMAN E. BROWN

Brothers on the same college football eleven are not uncommon. This year Harvard has its Bradford twins. Bucknell has its Earl and Myrl Goodwin.

But Iowa State probably has the most distinguished pair—from the standpoint of value to the team. They are the Behm boys of Cleveland, Ohio. John Behm captains the team and stars at quarter. His brother, Norton, plays left half.

Johnny is rated as one of the greatest broken field runners in the Missouri Valley conference, if not in the west in general. His brother Norton drew almost nation-wide attention last year by tearing off an 80-yard run against the powerful Minnesota eleven.

By an odd coincidence these two lads were the mainstays of a Cleveland coached team. Sam Williams, tutor of the Iowa Staters, was coach at East Tech High school, Cleveland, before joining the Iowa institution. It was at East Tech that the Behm boys learned their football, under William's diligent tutoring.

"Spike" Nave, another member of the team, is also a Cleveland product.

Those funny New York state boxing officials, who have the awfulest time trying to figure out some new way of getting into the limelight besides declaring championships forfeited, have just pulled another joke.

Ostensibly in an effort to prevent fouls during knockdowns they have decreed that the referee shall not start to count over a fallen boxer until his opponent shall have sought a neutral corner and there composed himself.

It can be readily seen that this is more than fair to the fallen boxer. In fact, it's so fair that it leans the other way—and cheats the opponent out of a possible knockout now and then. This for the very simple reason that no matter how agile the opponent may be he will consume two or three seconds in reaching the quietude of his corner.

This gives the man on the floor an unusually long count. In other words, he has a count of 12 to 13 seconds instead of 10 in which to collect his strength and clear his befuddled brain. And, oh, what a blessing a couple of seconds may be in such a case.

There is no way in which the fighter on his feet can be hurried to his corner. Supposing he is none too strong—his brain is none too clear. His sense of self-preservation will prompt him to take his time seeking his corner that his own brain may clear up, that his own legs may get back under him.

In short, the rule departs both from the traditions of the knockdown, from the real reason for the count of 10 and its fatal ending.

Now the idea is good. The opponent should be kept away from the fallen fighter until that man is "off the floor," technically until he has both knees off the canvas. But an efficient referee—and there are only a few of them left—can keep the eager antagonist in his place until that time.

But the commission will try it. Can't fool them.

The still recent defeat of Harvard at the hands of Dartmouth was bad enough in itself, but coming as it did along with other reverses to the so-called Big Three, it was almost a tragedy.

The week before that Holy Cross had beaten the Crimson. And, as the latter was going down to defeat Yale was taking a trimming from Pennsylvania.

And poor Princeton, while Dartmouth was whipping Johnny Harvard, was being squelched by Colgate.

An expert statistician will note instantly that the list of defeats handed the Big Three over a two-Saturday period totals just four.

And this while Yale's victory over Brown and Princeton's tie game with the Navy formed the only consolation for the Bulldog and the Tiger, and Harvard had nothing in which to find solace.

A sad season indeed for what their followers still hold to be the Big Three.

Tradition makes Yale, Harvard and Princeton the Big Three. This tradition will cling always to these eastern institutions. But tradition no longer wins football games.

For the last couple of years Tad Jones has stood between Yale and defeat. Now Tad's team is having its troubles.

Meanwhile Penn, Colgate, Dartmouth, Cornell and other teams are demanding more and more attention—building up a tradition on the gridiron that already knocks at the doors of the Big Three.

Berkeley-Palo Alto Await Great Game

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 19.—Activities on the gridirons of Berkeley and Palo Alto have been halted, and the football players of California and Stanford have retired to quiet country hotels to await the signal for the state's "big game" Saturday.

A free scoring contest is expected to develop when these traditional rivals meet in the Stanford stadium. Both teams are stronger on offense than on defense, and with new plays polished and perfected for the supreme effort of the year, it seems likely that the game will be wide open.

Betting continues to hover around even money. Each team has been defeated once in conference football, and each has been bowled over by the strong Olympic club. Washington made more first downs against California than against Stanford, but the Cards have a habit of slipping into mediocrity, and this fault tempers the enthusiasm of their backers.

Stanford looks much stronger in the backfield, with Nevers at full, Bogue and Murphy at halfback and Mitchell at quarter. Dixon's injury made it necessary for Coach Andy Smith to replace Carlson by Blewett at quarter so that the Bears would have a kicker. Perrin will be in Dixon's regular berth, with Imlay at the other halfback position. Jabs or Young will be at fullback.

SPEEDERS FINED

Two motorists fed too much gasoline into their automobiles and, as a result, yesterday were arraigned in justice court.

The defendants were M. G. Mordoff, of Klamath Falls, and M. M. Moore, of Portland. Both were arrested by County Traffic Officer Knowles, and both entered pleas of guilty.

Mordoff was ordered to pay a fine of $15, and Moore was assessed $20.

BOXER'S JAW BROKEN

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 19—"Tuffy" Wing, Portland lightweight boxer, suffered a broken jaw in his ring battle here Wednesday night, with Sammy Compagno, medical examination Thursday disclosed.
