Equally certain of this sort are ignored by the white house but the of Wilbur has been no some quarters, that the thought it best to authorize progress reconvened, demonstrated to make capital of the predicaments into which he has stumbled. They are as the most vulnerable in the present Coolidge opportunity will come to hand matter is brought to the attention of the president immediately after the saying that Commander had protested against and the alleged attempt to his widow's testimony court of inquiry excuse be commented upon at succeeded the late Secretary, Wilbur has been the one incident after another of the conspicuous of that which occurred during the presidential campaign when he was ordered to abandon his trip and return to his home. These two incidents have caused indignation in the president; Coolidge is said to have done this to prevent from delivering a speech, an advance copy of which caused a panic in the national committee because of statements which the officer proposed to make had been the victim of an amount of bad luck which might have come from the fault of his, nevertheless a burden of criticism disaster off Black and the attacks on the Mitchell trial add to his weakness as a president. Every indication at the time that President Coolidge would protect Wilbur as a predecessor Denby during the campaign. But as in the case of Denby it is not unlikely that the attack will retire and become too strong to be out of danger.
