Prisoner Gets Brief Freedom

Probably the freedom achieved yesterday by R. W. Carlson, of this city, was the briefest on record in the city's history.

Carlson, during a recent session of the grand jury, was indicted on a charge of assault and robbery, being armed with a dangerous weapon.

Yesterday the district attorney, confessing error, moved that the case be dismissed, in view of the fact that the indictment was defective.

It was a big moment for Carlson. Freedom. No more officers' stars staring him in the face. But his joy was of short duration.

Immediately, in the courtroom, he was re-arrested and, officers said, will be taken before the grand jury when it next convenes.

B. H. Pruitt was Carlson's alleged victim. J. C. James was indicted on the same charge as was Carlson, but he never has been placed under arrest.
