

WINIFRED CHARTS MEAN MATRIMONY TRIP WITH RUDY

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—Natacha Rambova, who began a divorce action in Paris Thursday against her husband, Rudolph Valentino, the motion picture actor, will marry again, and she hopes for children in her second try at wedlock.

Shortly after the news of the divorce action had reached this country, Mrs. Valentino, or Rambova, as she prefers to be called, revealed this and the fact she had sued on grounds of incompatibility, in an exclusive interview with the United News. She is living here with her aunt, Mrs. Theresa Werner, in an apartment on the upper west side.

The former Winifred Huidart also divulged the fact that in a year or two there would have been no Rudolph Valentino on the screen to turn a flapper's heart or head, if their married life had been a success.

They had made an agreement at the beginning of their marital venture to act and dance for five years, at the end of which time they would both retire and raise a family. Miss Rambova said. They hoped in the five years to make enough money to have an income which would permit them to desert Hollywood.

Loved Dogs
Hitherto the wife of the screen sheik has had nothing to say when Valentino publicly accused her of refusing to have children, of declining to make a home for him, and loving nothing as much as her pet dogs.

She certainly likes the dogs, she said Thursday, somewhat more than her husband, but as for their taking the place of children—well she just won't believe that Rudolph thought up that excuse all by himself.

Who the next husband of Rambova will be, Rambova wouldn't say. In fact she insisted that she had not met him yet. She was just as positive that Valentino was not agreeing to the divorce so that he might be free to marry some one else in the near future.

"Careers don't take the place of love," she volunteered as the interview ended, "nor dogs of children." Whereupon, Chee Wee, Chin Chin, Yen and Boudie, the Pekinese, who Rudolph says caused all the trouble, cocked a collective ear and Boudie barked.

GRAND JURY FINDS SIX INDICTMENTS

ments have been issued by Circuit Judge A. L. Leavitt.

The true bill returned yesterday was against W. K. Davidson, charged with violating the prohibition laws. He is at present in jail, and his bail yesterday was set by Judge Leavitt at $500.

The not true bill cleared Dick Nolan, accused of driving sheep from the range. He was released by the court.

Regarding Pecholt's case, his wife charges he was the victim of inhuman treatment at the hands of the police. She says that her husband, injured, lay in jail all night without proper treatment, and the next morning was released. He returned home, babbling with a fever, according to her.

Whether or not Cole was indicted secretly by the grand jury, he plans to return to Klamath Falls soon, he said shortly before he left.

After it had reported, the grand jury was released until Monday, February 24, 1926, by Judge Leavitt.

mit, a letter which Bramwell had written to the president of an unnamed state bank. The letter contained a proposition by Bramwell that a certain member of his staff of examiners would take over the management of the bank at a stipulated salary, in an effort to place the institution on its feet.

Under the terms of the proposition the stockholders of the unnamed state bank were to place their stock in escrow, giving the prospective purchaser a 12 months' option thereon and in the event he decided to purchase, his money was to be placed in the bank and the stockholders were to be paid in assets of the bank, which the banking department had criticized as questionable.

This proposition Haines had declared, was an alternative to an assessment of 100 per cent against the yards" district. It is here that the tragedy will be felt the heaviest.

Workmen who had "put a little away" at the Drovers' bank during the summer months to greet Santa Claus' visit, stopped in front of the bank, read the sign that it was closed, and walked on, apparently dazed by the swift stroke of misfortune that had swept at least part of their savings away and brought gloom to the dimly lighted little shacks they call home.

While admitting that the heavy Christmas shopping season on the banks' funds might have played an important part in their failures, the examiners would issue no statement in explanation of their action, or the details surrounding the tie-up.

Crowds continued to gather on the down town streets Thursday night, discussing the day's tragedy, but there was no indication of violence. Police, however, maintained a guard about the institutions.

EXTEND TIME

SALEM, Dec. 17.—The time for filing transcript of appeal in the cases of Tom Murray, Ellsworth Kelley and James Willos, sentenced to be hanged, was advanced today to January 2 by Circuit Judge Kelley.

Murray, Kelley and Willos were convicted of slaying John Sweeney, prison guard, in the sensational penitentiary break August 12.

GRAZED VETERAN SHOWS NO MERCY

SANTA ANA, Calif., Dec. 17.—(United News)—While on his knees pleading for his life, Karl Kaufmann, 28, local manufacturer, was shot, clubbed and stabbed by a grazed World war veteran here, Thursday.

The slayer, Walter S. Holbert, 31, dragged the backed and bleeding body of his victim to cover, entered Kaufmann's automobile, and calmly waited for the police to arrive.

He offered no resistance when arrested.

Piecing together incoherent statements of Holbert, police learned that he encountered Kaufmann on the road, where the latter was driving, and forced him to dismount from his car.

Arming a newly purchased rifle at Kaufmann, Holbert taunted him and compelled the manufacturer to get down on his knees. While Kaufmann was pleading for his life, police believe, the maniac fired four shots at him, two lodging in the victim's head.

Then, according to police, Holbert clubbed the fallen man with his rifle and stabbed him with a small knife.

"I wanted to make sure he was dead," Holbert is reported to have said.

Investigators learned that the veteran had purchased a rifle several hours before the slaying and that he had intended to kill every one on the ranch of a former employer at San Juan Capistrano.

Great Possibilities Seen in Machine Started by Mere Wave of Hand

Tremendous possibilities are seen by scientists in the discovery which V. K. Zwoykin, Russian inventor, has embodied in a new washing machine. By combining photoelectric cells with radio vacuum tubes Zwoykin, observers say, has succeeded in designing a machine which can be started merely by waving the hand. This simple gesture throws a shadow into device at top, resulting in a shower of electrons in the tube, with the result that the circuit is closed in the machine's motor and the apparatus started. Zwoykin is seen, giving a demonstration in New York.
