

STIRS UP SENATE ROW

Senate Interstate Commerce commission added their denials that a deal had been made. Underwood and Hefflin, indicated, however, that they had withdrawn their opposition to Woodcock, explaining they had no objection to the man, but that they were only opposing him to emphasize their demand for southern representation on the commission.

Dec. 21.—(United Press)—Senators who had just returned into between Underwood and certain senators over the Interstate Commerce commission provoked indignation on the part of the world court.

Richard V. Taylor, to succeed C. C. McWhorter, whose resignation the commission refused to accept, was announced without any previous notice from the White House. Taylor is a member of the Senate and declared his intention to resign at a time when a deal had been made. Taylor's resignation was to be withdrawn, but the appointment of Thomas Woodcock, whose nomination was last winter by the Democrats and insurance party to that his resignation was. Sen. Taylor, who was consulted before the appointment, made reference in a letter to the fact that he had been a member of the Alabama, and the Valley Hospital, and contented baby by mother's convalescence.
