Sermonette
What was the astonishment of one of the strangers on our streets last Sunday when he hailed Mr. Smith and asked him for a hand-out! Mr. Smith reached into his pocket and pulled out seven crisp, $20 bills and proceeded to give the unfortunate man six of them.

Was the stranger grateful? Not a bit of it. The wretch saw his chance to secure an additional $20 and he reached out and struck Mr. Smith, trying to steal the remaining bill from him.

That stranger is you. Mr. Smith is no other than God himself.

Without any desert of your own, God has given you six days in the week, reserving unto Himself only the seventh. "Remember thou keep holy the Sabbath day." He said. But in your madness to seek personal comfort, pleasure or gain, you refuse to obey. You reach out and try to steal the seventh day from Him. If you are honest with yourself are you not as ungrateful as the stranger?

Study the laws that govern this world. The tides of the sea, the fragrant flowers we love so well, the seasons of the year, the rising sun, the stars that adorn the heavens—all nature as we learn in the various departments of science obeys the laws of its author, God, excepting you. You alone, in violating the commandment of God, would defy your creator and God, saying: "I will not serve."

A child who ignores father and mother is called an ingrate, an unnatural child.

Is God less father or mother to you than your earthly parent? If you wilfully ignore Him Sunday after Sunday, can you be considered grateful? Look into your own heart and make an honest reply.

Loyalty to God, honesty to your neighbor, happiness in the home, eternity demand that you keep holy the Lord's day.

"Remember thou keep holy the Sabbath Day."

A. F. LOESER,

Young Man, Give Her a Fair Chance

If you want her to think highly of you, make it your business to give her half a chance. Do not force her to explain to her friends that you are quite a fellow in spite of your doubtful appearance. Look the part.

It is so much easier for her to admire you herself when others can see at a glance—without being told—that of course you are an up-and-doing young man, who is making headway in the world right now in 1926.

It pays to dress well every minute of every day. Look at your clothes and be your own prosecuting attorney, judge and jury as to whether you need a new suit.
