

JOANNA

CHAPTER XI

Joanna Is Invited to Yvonne's.
The flush that deepened the hues of Joanna's cheeks, and the wrinkle in her brow, did not escape Yvonne when Kenilworth and the girl returned to the table. Brandon, too, saw, and divided a quick glance between the girl and the man who had been dancing with her. Yvonne, in her fluttering way touched the girl's hand.

"He's been making love to you! I knew it. Was I right? Didn't he begin with your eyes?"

Joanna's frown vanished. In the sheer joy of her closeness to the woman whose exotic beauty and fascinating adventures in a world of hectic romance had made her a celebrity, her trouble over the mystery which confronted her in each new association was quickly charmed away.

larly fond of youth—young youth, such as yours, or seasoned youth such as Yvonne's.

"If you are of the mind to be amused, you will find Roddy most amiable."

Joanna thought Brandon was challenging her, but he gave no sign of it. She pondered, a minute, the miracle of that cryptic declaration of Kenilworth's at the edge of the dance floor. "I shall play for you, too!" spoken to her, Joanna, by one who was unimpressed even by such exquisite women as—Yvonne, for example! A tempest of exhilaration surged within her. In a flash the realization that had so far eluded her, of Brandon drew her to him, until she stood quite close. It was the prelude to a kiss.

"Am I supposed to tell?" she parried, appealing to Kenilworth, who was nonchalantly lighting a gold-tipped cigarette. He answered easily:

"Some day, my dear, you will wear your loves like medals on your breast, for your friends to estimate and your rivals to envy. You may as well begin now. I make my confession. I promise to overwhelm you with my adoration. But you must assure the company that I did not begin by paying you compliments."

"I have heard," Brandon remarked, "that Roddy never compliments a woman. A dozen of his victims have assured me that he declares his love first and then tells them why. His reasons are, therefore, accepted as being truthful statements of fact, and not flatteries. A woman doesn't class what is said of her by a man who is in love with her, as flattery. She believes it to be a just inventory of her perfections."

"Clever, that!" Yvonne declared. "It proves what I've always contended—that a man ought to have a style of his own. It's positively tiresome to listen to most men go sentimental."

"What weary hours you must spend!" Kenilworth exclaimed. "I promise you complete relaxation if you will take a turn on the floor with me. Miss Manners, here, is dying to ask Brandon what sort of a chap I am, and to ask him who you're planning to marry next."

"A cocktail first," she demanded. A waiter, to whom Kenilworth had entrusted a pair of silver flasks, responded to his signal. Joanna had refused a previous offering and had not been pressed. This time Brandon quietly reached across the table and turned up her glass.

When Yvonne, with a nod to her, had moved away for her dance with Kenilworth, Joanna turned to Brandon eagerly.

"He seemed to read just what I was thinking," she said. "Tell me about him—and Yvonne, too, I never dreamed that some day I would know her. You see she has been one of those interesting people we talk about just to prove that we keep up with the news."

"Shall we begin with Roddy?" Brandon asked, and they did. Joanna sought him out on the floor as Brandon explained him—drawing for her a curious picture of a wastrel—but a picture she classified as of a romantic idler in a colorful domain.

A bachelor lodge at Palm Beach where he was host to that company of women whose husbands labor at home for the money with which their wives blossom gorgeously and recklessly—beneath the Florida palms, and make their plays at Bailey's, America's great gambling rooms; a woer of debutantes whose names shone golden in the purlieus of society, and the amused dabbler among the studio moths of New York's Greenwich Village; a sportsman in England, where he hunted, occasionally, with the hounds of a country lord, and a beau-gallant patron of all the beauty and the bizarre that is France.

"A woman need never fear of being seen with our Roddy in attendance upon her," Brandon added to his general description. "His affairs are so many no one keeps track of them or becomes interested in a new one. He adds just the proper perspective to any young woman's background, for to be admired by Roddy is a cachet of extremely romantic worthiness."

"But his business—doesn't he really do anything?" Joanna wanted to know.

"He's of a family, you know. Inherited money. I believe he would explain that it is the duty of heirs who can help those of the generation who can't to pay the price of their pleasures. That keeps him moderately busy. He is particu-

Klamath High Has Crucial Game Thurs

The Klamath high school basketball team will take their last try for the county championship on Thursday night when they meet Merrill on the Merrill floor. There will be a preliminary girl's game at 7:30.

If the Klamath men win this contest they will be tied with Merrill for county championship honors and will play a final game at the close of the season. If Merrill, and Merrill is showing up strong, defeats Klamath the local men will not have a chance for laurels.

Friday night, February 12, Klamath will meet the Medford team in the American Legion building. The Medford men are heralded as the strongest valley team and runners-up for the state championship. They recently defeated the Salem team and so far have been undefeated.

Conquers Bad Breath and is Popular Again

"The day I started taking Carter's Little Liver Pills," says Mr. John A. Perry of New York City, "my habitual bad breath and bad stomach stopped. I strongly recommend them to all those afflicted with these nasty troubles. I assure you that my own case was a bad one, causing me untold embarrassment, and Carter's helped me right from the start."

Bad breath comes from sour stomach and can usually be relieved quickly by Carter's Little Liver Pills.

They are wonderful for constipation, sick-headache and indigestion and they physic the system in a mild and gentle manner, so bad after effects.

Recommended and for sale by all drug stores.

Att'y Marx Back From Portland

Attorney William Marx returned from Portland yesterday, where he argued a motion for the suppression of evidence in the case of Dr. R. B. Craver, charged under the federal law with sale of narcotics.

The contention is founded on a supreme court decision which gives a physician the right to prescribe narcotics for an addict. Both Richard Davis and the federal operative who gave evidence against Dr. Craver, appeared before the accused man as addicts, it is claimed. The court took the motion under advisement.
