Easter Fashions Are Interesting

By MAXINE DAVIS.
(Written for the United News)
NEW YORK, March 27.—When the Easter parade starts up Fifth avenue, those ignorant of the latest thing in fashions will observe many interesting details.

For instance, the deceiver cri in shoes is in the jungle leathers. The antelope, the crocodile, the snake and lizard have all been stripped of their hides to make dainty shoes in which your well-turned-out woman can march in the Easter parade.

The shoes are made altogether of these leathers or of combinations of two of them. They come in the most modern shades, too: Parchment, opal grey, sauterne, mauvette and metal brown.

The heels on which milady struts are the highest in years, tall, slim, and appropriately named "spike heels." The initial buckles set smartly on her instep are but a part of her present passion for initials. She has her monogram on her bag, her umbrella, her hat, her blouse, her hanky—anything that will take letters.

If she wears spike heels, she is equally precarious in her head-gear. She wears felts, soft straws, and hats of belting that are pinched into style. They are tall and severe, and pinched into the most quirky shapes. When they top a tailored suit they are vivid, of lovebird, chartreuse or abstein green. When they match the other accessories of the costume—and the Easter parade will show decisively that all accessories have to match each other rather than the dress or coat. They are of delicate pastel shades such as golden wheat, chevreuse, wild honey, crystal grey and sugar cane. Hosiery that set them off will be peculiarly alluring. They will be of soft rosy tans and greys that, in the sheer chiffons, are subtle and seductive. There will be stockings of such delicate hues as atmosphere, nude, rose blond, champagne, blush, grain, moonlight grey, dove grey and shadow.

And then, if it's a windy day, a new detail will be revealed to the avenue. Lingerie is selected to match the hosiery exactly. Bloomers of the exact tint of the hose are worn—with interesting effect.

The bags and gloves milady will carry will, of course match hat and shoes. The bags are particularly smart when made of various shoe leathers: Kid, calf, lizard, crocodile, and so on. They are also particularly expensive in these hides.

Of course every coat will have a cape, and some coats will be capes altogether. All will be little caplets fluttering silky and medium sized capes of military aspects, and great big capes of long lobe folds, just like the three bears. The fact that few women will look well in this mode, designed especially for the slim young thing, will not deter anyone from buying them. Rather be out of the world than out of capes.

And then, there is the tailfour, happily recovered from the limbo of lost fashions—a conservative garment, severely proud of its age and lineage and correctness. It is rather short as to jacket and double breasted, or it rejoices in tuxedo lines. It is popular in navy and the dusty pastel tweeds.

Frocks are silken and feminine, rejoicing in floating scarfs, panels, flares, godets, tiers, and what-not, made in such romantically named shades as maintenance, lavender, Marie Antoinette, Josephine, polignac and others.

The Easter parade will be a subdued riot of color and infinite variety.
