ISLAND VOLCANO IN NEW ERUPTION

HONOLULU, April 10.—(United Press)—Following a severe earthquake, which shook the entire island of Hawaii and a tidal wave, which swept the west coast, Maunaloa, famous active volcano, was in eruption today. The road from Hilo, the principal port of the island, is crowded with autoists rushing to view from a distance the great streams of lava, which are sweeping down the sides of the mountain from a height of 12,000 feet.

Today's eruption is just a year late, the famous volcanologist, Dr. Thomas Augustus Jager, Jr., having predicted it for last April.

Observers Spectacle—From his study in Volcano House, the hotel on the brink of Kilauea, Hawaii's other famous volcano, Dr. Jager today observed the spectacle from a scientific viewpoint, and watched carefully for any indication for a rise of the lava in Kilauea, which often erupts in sympathy.

The earthquake rocked houses throughout the island, the largest of the group, but it is believed did little damage to property. The tidal wave swept the shores carrying with it some small boats. Full reports of the tidal wave have not reached Honolulu.

Learning that Maunaloa, one of the highest active volcanoes in the world, was in eruption, residents of Hilo pressed every available automobile into service, and went to Volcano House to view the spectacle from a safe distance.

OREGON MAKES POOR SHOWING

Stanford Walks Away With Track Meet by Score of 121 to 10

OLD STANFORD OVAL, Calif., April 10.—United Press—Doing it more as a favor than anything else, the track and field squad of the University of Oregon came to Palo Alto to meet Stanford University this afternoon.

The score was incidental. It ended: Stanford 121, Oregon 10.

The principal purpose of the meet—admitted by the coaches of both schools—was to provide Stanford with the finishing off considered necessary for its big annual clash with the University of California next week.

Oregon's men had had virtually no training. They had participated in only one event, and that an inter-class affair. But at that, they did a bit less than was expected of them. They were figured to take at least 35 points.
