GENERAL BUTLER TELLS OF PARTY

or of General Butler, welcoming the commander to San Diego as the commander of the marine corps base.

Thought Drunk

Major Ross Rowell, commanding the second marine aviation group at North Island, and Captain Chase Rice, adjutant of the marine corps and one of the guests at Colonel Williams' party said that they were of the opinion that Colonel Williams was drunk when he was taken from the hotel by Mrs. William and Captain A. L. Cates.

The general stressed the point that he had done all he could do to avoid the present situation.

"People at the hotel know me," he asserted. "What could I do after spending two years as a cop beating other people's heads off for being drunk? I could get away with the affair at Colonel Williams' home, but what would be said had I let the hotel matter go?"

Was Drunk Alright

When the colonel left the hotel, Butler said, he was walking on the side of his feet and was being supported.

The witness was asked if he could possibly have mistaken an illness for drunkenness.

"Oh, Colonel Williams might have been sick," he replied, "drinking this liquor nowadays would make anyone sick—he was drunk all right."

The general denied that he had taken a drink.

The court was adjourned at a late hour and trial will be resumed at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning.

General Butler is not expected to appear again at the trial. He left the court room supported by two officers and returned to the naval hospital, where he is a patient.

KILAUEA IS DUE FOR OUTBURST

Scientist Believes Spectacular Eruption May Occur Momentarily

HONOLULU, April 12.—(United News)—Kilauea, the principal fire pit of Maunaloa, appears ready for a new volcanic disturbance.

The smaller crater on Maunaloa, which erupted three days ago, is now silent but is gathering force for a new outbreak of even greater intensity, according to Dr. Thomas A. Jagger, scientist.

Rumbles are heard from Kilauea and if both pits show volcanic activity simultaneously, the sight will be the most spectacular in the recent history of Maunaloa, residents of the section declare.

Hundreds of tourists are leaving Honolulu for Hilo, in anticipation of a new eruption.

Heavy rushes of subterranean lava at Kilauea, Maunaloa's largest fire pit, are reported from Hilo.

Molten lava was bubbling near the rim of the crater, and was expected to burst over the sides within a few hours.

A strange feature of the present show of activity from Maunaloa following the eruption three days ago, is that months ago superstitious natives were quoted in newspapers here with statements that Madame Pele, the goddess of the volcano, was about to appear again.

The legend of Madame Pele is that she uses molten lava as punishment for sins of her people. On these occasions when she breaks into fury, only the sacrifice of a virgin, cast into the flowing lava can appease her wrath, the story recites.

Observers returning from Hilo state that lava flowed eight miles from Maunaloa Saturday before solidifying.

squeeze him out of the company at a price below the value of his holdings.

While attorneys in the case today declined to comment on the exact form of the contemplated suit, it is understood the attorney general will not seek complete ousting of the lumber company from the state, but more probably will seek to force the company to cease its activities at Longview, Wash., in building the city.

The attorney general, however, declined to say what action he would take.

What would you do without electricity?

Interesting essays have been written—pages long—describing the calamities that would happen if the world ran out of electricity.

Interesting—but idle. The practical question is—what do you do with electricity?

Few homes have as many convenience outlets as every housewife wants—but they are easily and cheaply installed.

A vacuum cleaner—an electric sewing machine—a washing machine—an electric range—these take most of the drudgery out of housework.

Would you—if you could—do without electricity?

Electricity is the cheapest service you can buy.
