

PURSUERS TAKE FOUR OF SEVEN JOILET FELONS

Gun Battle Marks Action, Volunteers Hurt by Bullets

JOILET, Ill., May 6.—(United News)—With four of the seven convicts who slashed their way out of the Illinois state penitentiary captured, citizen vigilantes and sheriff's deputies were believed to be closing in on the other three, somewhere in the wooded sections of northern Illinois.

Reports to Warden John Whitman at the prison here Thursday night from Streater and Morrison indicated that the last of the fugitive murderers may be taken into custody before dawn.

Gun battles and surprise attacks marked the first day of the hunt. Eight counties took part in pursuit of the men who killed Deputy Warden Peter Klein and kidnaped Captain of the Guards J. W. Keeley in making a bold escape from the state's new "escape proof" penitentiary.

Two of the convicts were wounded in a battle with posse near Lenore. They are recovering in a hospital at Streater. Two others were surprised Thursday afternoon, while sleeping in a barn left near the scene of the battle and gave themselves up.

Of the three who remain at large, two are believed to be hiding in the woods near Morrison, and one is probably somewhere in the vicinity of Streater.

Bernardo Roa and Robert Torres, the wounded prisoners are not seriously hurt and will live to face the gallows for their part in the stabbing to death of Klein.

Walter Staleski and Gregorio Itzo, captured in the barn left were brought immediately to the penitentiary and locked up in "dungeon" cells.

Two citizens were wounded slightly in the Leonore engagement.

The vigilantes trailing them were increased at sunset as farmer and small town merchants finished their labors and joined the armed volunteers.

FIGHTS RESUMED BY NEW YORKERS

NEW YORK, May 6.—(United News)—Up in Tex Rickard's fancy new barn, the soggy thud of padded leather and the scuffing of nimble soles on resined canvas will signal the renewal of big time boxing in New York Friday night.

The glare of calcium on straining bodies and flailing arms will reveal the first bouts of what is known as the summer season in the cauliflower industry.

Jack Renault, the Canadian, who has flirted with real ring fame for many years, missing out because he lacks the "killer" instinct and is too inclined to be cautious, will make his reappearance in these parts as a headliner. Opposed to Jack will be another Jack, of the family name of Demave, a blonde and bustling youngster from across the Hudson river.

The Canadian must survive the furious left hand assaults of this tough boy from Hoboken if he is to advance up the flatic ladder and not skid right down again to the bottom where his indifferent fighting sent him a couple of years ago.

WHICH MEANS IT MAY RAIN AGAIN

Precipitation in Portland was only a trace—0.1 of an inch, but the entire day was a threatening one.

The heaviest downfall reported in this district was at Bull Run lake, with a total of 2.36 inches. Heavy rain was general over the western slope of the Cascades.

TEAR BOMB IS LONG QUIETUS FOR JAIL GIRL

Eastern Prison Death of Young Inmate Is Probed

SCRANTON, Pa., May 6.—(United News)—Julia Sanko, a 15-year-old girl prisoner who was about to become a mother, died in a hospital here after tear bombs had been thrown into her cell at Lackawanna county jail to quiet her, it was disclosed Thursday.

George Benore, a deputy warden, admitted throwing the tear bombs.

Dr. J. D. Jenkins, the coroner, performed an autopsy which showed congestion in the girl's lungs. Although he has not yet announced the cause of death, he said he didn't believe the tear bombs had anything to do with it. Julia became hysterical in her cell Monday, screaming to be freed. Benore threw the tear missiles into the cell and she became quiet in a few minutes.

Tuesday she became very ill, and was taken to the state hospital, where she died in a few hours. An investigation is under way.

Radical Leaders of Strikers Seen As Moving Force

By GILBERT FRANKAU

CLEVELAND, O., May 6.—(United News)—Britain's fight against the general strike is the struggle for liberation from the strangling economic fetters imposed by a radically led labor political minority.

On the outcome of this encounter—which has been in the making for years and which I believe will be over within a week—depends the future of civilization, as we know it in England today.

Over and above the immediate question of wages and working conditions in the mining industry however, is the far more important question of divorcing politics from trade. The two simply will not mix, as is shown by the example of Russia.

This "hamstringing" of British industry by the communistic and socialistic laborite laborers is utterly foreign to the fundamental Anglo-Saxon concept of freedom, both of the worker and of his employer. The facts are simple. Some 4,000,000 British workers who operate the major industries have placed themselves—or rather have permitted themselves to be placed—under the domination of radical leaders. They have walked out because they had no other option.

At heart, however, the great bulk of England is against the subversive tendencies of the labor movement, which, in the last general election polled only 5,000,000 votes out of a total of 17,000,000.

Because of the socialistic domination of British labor all workers, whether laborite, liberal or conservative are compelled to contribute to the labor "political fund." They also are subject to restrictive measures of work imposed by the union, which fights piece rates, reduces output, and prevents any but union workers being employed. Closed shop conditions have been the curse of our trade.

In a nutshell, our labor leaders are either definitely bolshevik or will not see beyond their noses. But the men these leaders have called out, with the exception of a few, are patriotic British citizens. And once the government has defeated this labor-political movement, with its constant threat of bolshevism, I for one, am confident that British industry will be able to adopt American methods of management and efficiency on as wide a scale as our geographical conditions permit.

But without the open shop, all real progress in our industries is impossible.

Farmer Relief Has Congress Watching Date

WASHINGTON, May 6.—(United News)—Subsidy features of the Haugen farm relief bill were attacked when the house resumed consideration of agricultural measures Thursday.

To speed up action so that adjournment would not be delayed the house decided to begin night sessions and met from 8 to 11 p. m. Thursday to hear a series of short speeches.

Argument against the Haugen bill, which is sponsored by the corn belt republicans and Frank O. Lowden has been more effective than its friends expected and they have decided to put on one of their heavy guns, Representative Dickinson of Iowa, Friday, to attempt to recover the lost ground. Many democrats have fallen away from the Haugen bill, which they had previously been inclined to support because it might put the president in the uncomfortable position of having to veto it. The administration's Tinchler bill, which would loan $100,000,000 to co-operatives and require repayment to the federal treasury, is gaining recruits after having appeared to be doomed earlier. The most favorable development in this direction was the announcement by Representative Aswell, Louisiana democrat, that he would move to amend his $10,000,000 loan bill by adding $100,000,000 so that except for the incidental machinery it would be similar to the administration bill.

This brings many democrats in close alignment with the administration once more and increases the chances of the Tinchler bill.

GIRLS' COOKING GOOD TO LEADER

Frank Sexton, county club leader, spent Wednesday at Malin and Merrill, calling on the girls' cooking, home making, and sewing clubs located in those communities.

The work is progressing in fine shape, according to Mr. Sexton.

At Merrill the club unit is the largest in Klamath county. Mrs. R. H. Anderson, Mrs. Robert Dalton and Miss Thirza Anderson, a high school girl, are doing exceptionally good work as directors.
