Nevada Desert Again Scene of Wild Caprices

GERLACH, June 28.—(United News)—A tragedy of the Nevada desert has been revealed through discovery of the body of Jack Casey, aged buckaroo and rancher, who died while struggling toward Gerlach for his summer provisions. Constable Henry Hughes found the body, partially buried in the alkali sands of Black Rock desert, late Monday.

According to Hughes' reconstruction of the circumstances surrounding Casey's death the rancher had started for Gerlach shortly after the winter rains. His horse had fallen in the thick mud of the desert floor, which still held rain water from the mountains. Casey, it was presumed, had attempted to lead the animal and had become trapped in the slime. The position of the body indicated that the man had made a desperate struggle to escape.

Oil Driller Here To Regain Health Is Highly Pleased

George Von Breyman, in seeking health and repatriation of shattered bones and nerves, chose Klamath county, far above sea level, with cool nights and warm days.

Von Breyman is an oil driller from Compton, California. With his son, Eugene, he is here to regain his health. While working around heavy machinery in the oil fields von Breyman suffered a broken back and for months he lay in a cast unable to move.

"I've always heard so much about the Klamath country, the beautiful scenery here and the wonderful chances to hunt and fish, that I chose it above all other places on the Pacific coast to enjoy a rest," said von Breyman yesterday.

Have Day Off Is Too Strange Says New York Officer

NEW YORK, June 28.—(United News)—One day off every week may be all right but John A. Hodgins first 24 hour vacation in 30 years of service as an ambulance driver created a problem.

"Leisure brings laziness," he said after the first few hours of his vacation had been spent in trying to find out what to do. In fact he said, he became so lazy that he didn't feel like going back to work in the morning.

Hodgins has been answering emergencies as an ambulance driver for three decades, working 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Recently the city decreed that he should be given every Sunday and evening off.

Unlike the postman who goes on a hike on his day off, the veteran driver promised he wouldn't take a Sabbath spin into the country. "Too much chance for an accident," he said.

RAIN KILLS PHEASANTS Fifty per cent of the Chinese pheasants hatched in the Willamette valley during May were killed by cold rains. Consequently, a poor hunting season is expected.

Council Invited To Participate Chiloquin Rodeo

A letter from Mayor A. C. Gienger of Chiloquin, extending a formal invitation to Mayor Goddard and the Klamath Falls city council to attend the rodeo and old-time western celebration at Chiloquin July 3, 4, 5, and 6, was read to the municipal body at its weekly session last night.

The invitation stated that the Chiloquin festival would be replete with colorful western entertainment and urged Mayor Goddard and the councilmen to come and lend their assistance in making it a real celebration. The majority of councilmen present indicated their intention of accepting Mayor Gienger's invitation.

Routine business matters were disposed of by the municipal body at last night's session and a motion to hold a test operation of the new street grader recently purchased by the city was adopted.

The new machine is reported as having failed to function with satisfaction and the council will have a demonstration made before them to determine its efficiency before final acceptance of the grader is made.
