

Boy, Page Chase! Only Son of the Original Chase

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20.—(United News)—The name of Chase is coming back to the box scores. Hal Chase's son has signed with the Mission club of the Pacific Coast league—the youngest player ever to scrawl his name on a baseball contract.

Hal, Jr., is only 16 years of age, and a student at Sacred Heart college. He will not graduate until next year but will practice with the local club at every opportunity until he can devote his full time to baseball.

Anyone who has seen the elder Chase play will recognize his son at a glance. He is the image of his father, facially and on the diamond. He also has the same physique. Two inches less than six feet in height, he throws left handed and bats right handed, in his father's style. The combination is unusual.

"He even has the same twinkle in his eye," said Charley Graham of the Seals.

Young Hal isn't certain whether he will make a pitcher or a first baseman. His father played shortstop, third, and did a turn in the catcher's box before discovering that he could cover the initial sack better than any other player in the game.

The youngster was nonplussed when Bill McCarthy, Mission manager, asked him today something for newspaper men. Finally the boy had responded:

"My mother has always told me that my father was accused of many things of which he was not guilty. Just like Jimmy O'Connell, he was made the goat.

"I am going to make baseball my profession and whatever my father has done or been accused of doing, I hope to redeem the name. And I hope I'll be just as good a player as dad."

Politics Touching Presidency Injected Into Eleven States

WASHINGTON, July 20.—(United News)—Presidential politics and national issues are involved in the corn belt conference of eleven states at Des Moines this week.

To some degree the meeting will indicate whether the insurgents of the middle west are ready to carry their protest to the extent of setting up former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois as a rival of President Coolidge.

Some of the more aggressive delegates are understood to be preparing a maneuver to put the conference on record in this respect, using as the wedge Senator Cummins' recent opinion that Coolidge will not be a candidate for another term.

The more conservative element probably will argue that to bring in personal politics will weaken the force of the meeting. If the issue is pressed a fight is likely. The direct business in hand is the crystallizing of sentiment in favor of farm relief legislation, like the McNary-Haugen bill, which failed in congress recently.

Election of senators and congressmen who will give farmers not only sympathy, but votes is to be urged. In the background is the tariff question which, because of various ramifications, actually causes more worry among eastern republican leaders than simple farm relief agitation.

This tariff factor, though still quiescent, bears watching. Some farm leaders declare that the farmers' troubles are due to the fact that industry is protected by a high tariff which throws it out of line with agriculture and gives it a higher price scale.

The McNary-Haugen bill was framed to make the protective tariff effective on farm products by keeping the domestic supply down to the point where the protective wall would become effective. Farm leaders are declaring that if they don't get the McNary-Haugen bill they will insist on downward tariff revision for industry to equalize it with agriculture. This fertile ground is being cultivated industriously by democrats who see in the situation the first real hope of arousing popular interest in tariff revision. They are promising that if they get control of congress they will immediately enact a bill restoring the competitive tariff principles of the Underwood law passed under the Wilson administration.
