

Ritchie Proves Superior in Ring And Puts Swindler to Sleep in the First Minute of Third Round; Fiesta Was Success; Best Card of Long Time

Nearly a thousand fight fans yelled approval to the high heavens here yesterday afternoon when Earl Ritchie, the hard hitting lumberjack, won a decision over Joe Swindler, prohibition officer, by a knockout in the third round.

And above the shouting of ring followers whose enthusiasm grew out of a good scrap, could be heard the exultant cheers of anti-prohibition, half-crazed with joy because a rum chaser had met defeat. That Swindler's line of business held him at a disadvantage with the crowd, was evidenced when hoots and jeers virtually outweighed the applause which greeted his entrance into the ring.

Prize Was Willed
Smiling and willing to fight, the proli held up his end of the battle well at the start, but the big lumber mucker had too many hands and too much steam for him. The fight was actuated by a grudge which has existed between the two battlers since they last met, several years ago. Prior to yesterday the men had fought twice, Swindler winning one decision and Ritchie the other.

Judging from countenances and general demeanor, the lumberjack felt his animosity the keenest, for while the proli maintained an attitude of good nature until Ritchie put him out, the woodman's face was grim throughout the fight. That he was bent on "getting his man" was apparent.

First Round Even
The first round went off in quite the usual fashion with each heavy-weight feeling out his opponent's stuff. Some blows were exchanged, but nobody lost any blood or was apparently any worse for the count. But when the gong brought the glove gladiators into the center of the arena for the second tilt, the proli landed a resounding smack between Ritchie's face and eyes, and the battle was on.

Fully aroused, the lumberjack began to unlimber his trip-hammer hands and while the proli kept coming back for more, his attack at the end of the second, was weakening. It was about the middle of the third that Ritchie connected his powerful right with Swindler's jaw, and the law took to the canvass while Referee Bobby Ross counted the tolling ten.

Swindler came to his senses a few minutes after the knockout and upon shaking hands with Ritchie, grinning then, said in all friendliness: "Well, that's one for me and two for you. I guess that tells the story. More power to you and your fight career."

Small Excitement
A little touch of excitement in the audience introduced the semi-windup between Bobby White, local fighter, and Frankie Doyle of Pendleton. One ring fan who had very apparently come to deride the efforts of the prohibitionist battler, took another man's seat. He refused to give up the seat when the latter returned, and a fistie encounter ensued in which the defendant was making good headway when a policeman stopped the argument. Cries on the part of the crowd to "put 'em in the ring," were of no avail, and the seat imposter was forcibly ejected from the hall.

White and Doyle went through six highly satisfactory rounds, to a draw, a decision which seemed to please everybody. Both fighters were in excellent form and fought hard. The Pendleton puncher had a habit of ducking which, had White been able to connect with the proper uppercut, would have proved unfortunate. Bobby landed one or two of these, but they were ineffectual. The scrap slowed up somewhat in the fifth, when the hard pace began to tell on the boys, but the sixth finished with some pretty lively work.

Heavyweight Makes Challenge
Following this semi-windup, Larry Saesaretti, heavyweight miner from Jackson, California, was introduced to the crowd as the challenger of the main event winner. A fight between he and Ritchie will be arranged in the near future. Promoter Johnny Sylvester, the lumberjack's manager, stated.

Mike Daly, popular Pelican City scrapper, was given a draw in his four-round special event with Pat McFadden, a tough and stock battler from Wood, California. This fight rivaled the semi-windup in point of interest and won the whole-hearted approval of the crowd. Both boys fought hard and well. Daly has the reputation of being a hard-hitting whirlwind, and lives up to it, but the rocky Wood fighter took his dynamite blows like a gentleman.

Special Preliminary
Biddy Hinch and Jack Davis, local boys, fought a special preliminary, in which Davis was given the decision. Both were inexperienced in ring tactics, and showed it, but they were willing and headed each other considerable punishment. Biddy went to floor once during the fight, while he was back on his feet in a flash, it was this point which gave Davis the decision. Aside from that the boys fought fairly evenly.

The Kid Rider versus Kid Fargo match came to a sudden and surprising end when Fargo rested too long on the canvas and allowed himself to be counted out. He regained his feet with a startled look on his face, hardly realizing that his inexperience had lost him a fight. Rider had the younger lad outclassed, however, so it was no doubt just as well that the fight ended in the first round.

Cardinals Still Retain Lead in National League

(By United News)

The league leaders marked time Monday, breaking even in their holiday double bills.

St. Louis retained first place in the National league by breaking even with the Pirates, while Cincinnati was squeaking out an even break from the dangerous Cubs. Hurling straight ball, Rhem pitched his seventh straight victory, winning from Pittsburgh, 8 to 1. The Pirates reared in the afternoon encounter, however, scoring four runs off the combined offerings of Sothoron and Reinhardt, while St. Louis could make only two off Kremer.

After losing the first game 2 to 0 to the Cubs, the Reds hammered two hurlers to win the second, 7 to 4. The first was a tough game to lose, as May, Meeker and Donahue had allowed Chicago but two hits, against four which Root permitted.

The Robins and Phillies divided, Brooklyn taking the first 8 to 6, while Philadelphia annexed the other 8 to 2.

In the American league, the Yanks split with the Athletics, while Cleveland dropped a game to St. Louis after winning the morning contest. As a result the Yanks maintained their six game lead.

Four pitchers could not check Philadelphia bats in the opener, the Mackmen winning 5 to 2, but Hoyt and Pennock allowed their opponents only four hits in the afternoon, the Hugmen taking the second game, 2 to 1. The galloping Indiana broke even 7 to 6 and 3 to 1.

Chicago won a double header from Detroit 7 to 5 and 1 to 4, while Washington won one from
