

Spokane Settles Down To Gaze At National Races

SPOKANE, Wash., Sept. 23. (AP)—With all four air derbies concluded, Spokane Friday settled itself comfortably and gazed skyward to watch the National air races in progress here over Feltz airfield.

The first event, the light commercial class, was captured by James Ray, of Wilkes Grove, Penn., in a Pittsburh Sequiwing. His average speed was 138.33 miles an hour.

E. K. Ballough of Detroit, placed second with a speed of 132.63 and C. M. Holman, St. Paul, took third honors with 131.09 miles an hour, barely missing out J. R. Wood of Wausau, Wis., who averaged 127.05.

In the 100 mile race for the Detroit News Air Transport trophy, C. W. Hawas of Houston, Texas, piloting a Ryan air biplane, was first with an average speed of 105.39 miles an hour. Jack Frye, Los Angeles, took second honors and John Miller, of Milwaukee, Wis., placed third.

They were the only entrants in the event.

Referee Tells of Big Bout Decision before the count of ten even if he had started immediately after he hit the floor," said Barry.

"Gene was hurt, badly hurt by a left hook flush to his jaw, but he knew what was going on every second.

"The few extra seconds helped him, but Dempsey lost any chance that he might have had to finish the champion when he failed to live up to the rules.

Warned Fighters

"The last thing I told the men before they went to their corners to strip for action, was the rule which requires a referee to see that a boxer has retired to the farthest neutral corner before starting a count over the man who has been felled."

According to Barry, the grim determined Dempsey actually was trying to take a position directly behind the fallen champion from which to attack if Gene struggled to his feet.

"Jack tried to circle around me and get into his own corner, where he would be behind Tunney and within a few feet of him," Dave said.

"I held him off with my arm and told him: 'Go to a neutral corner, Jack, a neutral corner.'"

Revised Count

"The timekeeper had counted up to four before Dempsey realized that he would have to obey and started for the proper corner. Then I turned and picked up the count, signalling with my fingers that I was starting the one, two, three, four, five, for which Gene was listening."

The Illinois Boxing commission took little notice of the attempts of Jack Dempsey's manager to claim that the count had been unduly long.

"I went before the commission today," Barry said. "They declared that everything had been done properly and congratulated me."

Klamathitis Attacks All Who Come Into Contact With Germ Found Here

We live in an age of diseases. Our grandmas and grandpas had comparatively few. A half dozen or so of good substantial orthodox ailments sufficed to meet their limited needs and provide ample cause for all grumbles and complaints.

A few short years, however, have wrought direful changes in the matter of maladies, and the multiplication of ills afflicting the modern generation could only be logarithmically or reported to other branches of higher mathematics.

Take this new ailment, Klamathitis, for instance. A decade ago it was almost unknown except around the Klamath Basin, where the only ones stricken were those who lived thereabouts, and they seldom got around much to infect the rest of the country, so it was not generally recognized as a national menace. It is getting to be serious enough now though to attract the attention of our best minds, and strenuous efforts are going to be necessary to handle it adequately.

By remaining entirely away from the Klamath territory, the average person is generally immune from an attack, but those who have occasion to pass through, especially during the vacation period of the summer months, are almost certain to be overtaken by the germ, which few indeed ever succeed in eradicating from the system. The malady afflicts the victims in varying degrees of intensity. Persons who fish and are often known as fishermen, are always among those hardest hit. In the Klamath country are promiscuously scattered eighty-five or ninety lakes and a hundred or so bubbling streams filled with hungry little water animals called trout and bass and funny names like that, and these little vermin will wriggle and jump around in the water where folks are passing and make faces and dare them to cast a fly on a line in their direction.

It seems astounding, but thousands of otherwise respectable people lost all control of themselves, once they got out and are surrounded by these gamey jumping specimens. Carrying on a frantic warfare until half a boatload is secured, they will devour some ravenously and rush away to inoculate their friends with their affliction.

Then we have the bird fever, another serious complication of Klamathitis, which is taking a heavy toll from the ranks of good citizens and is rapidly assuming serious proportions. Symptoms of these attacks occur later in the season, the germs apparently being air-borne, as huge numbers, in isolated territory as well as in congested districts, become afflicted with an engulfing wave and, despite all methods of combativeness so far discovered, there has been found little to do but allow the disease to run its course.

It would seem that with the growing publicity and fame extended to the Klamath country as a desirable meeting center, varieties of our wild fowl have discovered the advantages of the marshy lands so satisfactory for their particular needs, that for the past few seasons all the wild geese and ducks in the world have assembled here in the early autumn for their annual convention.

No sooner, however, can a session be gotten safely under way and nominations for officers or whatever other business for the good of the order is safely launched, than patients of this bird fever above mentioned appear from every direction, banging away and bagging enormous numbers. They come forth heavily armed and prepared to undergo any hardship in order to interrupt and hinder the procedure of the convention. Multitudes of able-bodied and otherwise healthy men, who should be at home supporting their families, swarm to this territory periodically, obsessed with these described Balaivik tendencies.

To a serious degree also are the seekers after other forms of life brought under the magic spell of this locality. A standing open challenge by countless mallard and black-tail ducks, in certain each year to bring a spirited response from enthusiasts prepared to camp and tramp the pine-covered hills for antlered heads, venison steaks and jerky.

So wide a variety of luring temptation prevails that scarcely a month in the year rolls around without its "open season" on something and the poor visitor

Pirates Lose But Still Lead League

(By United Press)

The National league race is not quite over. The world series seat sale in Pittsburgh took another slump Friday when the Pirates went down before the hard fighting Giants.

Overcoming a five-run Pirate lead, the Giants took the third game of the crucial series, 6-5.

The Cardinals lost to the Braves, 3 to 2, when Fournier hit a home run in the ninth with the score tied.

As a result the Giants moved back into second place, two and a half games behind the Pirates. The Cardinals are half a game back of the Giants.
