"SAVING HIS COUNTRY"

"Big Bill" Thompson's stir in Chicago to rid the libraries and public schools of histories which give Great Britain the edge in some of the early struggles of the democracy, is a grandiose gesture, but wholly futile.

In his new zeal to deliver America from the hands of Great Britain by destroying the bonds of pro-British propaganda, Chicago's mayor seemingly forgets even if he can find an acceptable group to censor existing histories, there remains the problem of obtaining history texts with which to restock the shelves.

Good histories aren't written like novels. To be a good historian is perhaps the rarest of intellectual distinctions. Too few who attempt it are able to properly balance those two great ingredients of any history—reason and imagination. The great historian must possess sufficient imagination to make his narrative affecting and of interest, and yet he must so command it that he preserves the facts. Otherwise a distorted image of his event, or epoch, results.

Thus it may have been with early American history, depending upon the nationality of authors whose works have contributed to the pages of contemporary historians. But the fact remains that there must have been times when the British merited commendation. A book—novel or history—which kept one element eternally good and the other utterly bad, would be dull reading.

If the youngsters are to read history consistently, it must be interesting. Hence the writer must have enough imagination to make his text picturesque, yet exercise sufficient reason to keep the book true to the times. Quite an order, that. Mayor Thompson, so until you find more competent historians, better refrain from burning texts now in use.

ANOTHER RECORD

How all London is agog over a clergyman's assertion that he has found a 17-year-old English flapper who boasts she can drink 40 cocktails between breakfast and breakfast, is related in this morning's press dispatches.

A remarkable feat, no doubt, even for a flapper, but most remarkable is the fact that London newspaper columns "blazon her prowess." Where the daily cocktail average for seasoned flappers has been from 12 to 15, this new stimulation will undoubtedly increase that to at least 25, and so the anonymous flapper will have made her contribution to society. How different from the precedent established by the young girl who wins a tennis cup, a scholarship or who goes out to create a home. Happily the latter are in the majority. Perhaps they get less of the world's recognition, but their achievements are monumental in themselves, and lasting.

The flapper who drinks 40 cocktails today will be mighty lucky to be drinking water 40 years hence.

The school bus is supposed to travel this route and unless the work is begun in the near future it will probably be impossible for necessary trips to be made and the school children will be deprived of their schooling part of the winter on account of no cutovers and low muddy places.

Did You Ever Stop to Think?

By EDSON R. WAITE Shawnee, Oklahoma

United States Senator Frank B. Willis of Ohio, says:

THAT Alaska has plenty of coal veins 40 feet thick distributed over thousands of square miles, produces as good berries as California, as good potatoes as Michigan, as fine wheat as Minnesota, and as gorgeous flowers as Florida, yet Alaska has not been advertised and, therefore, nobody knows of its wonderful resources. Consequently, so far as the vast proportion of our people is concerned, Alaska, the wonderful, might as well not possess these advantages.

It is so in business. You may sell better groceries, make better shoes, or compound better soap than your competitor—you know this, but the world does not. They read your competitor's ad and buy his wares, and you wonder why you don't get the business. Why? Just because you do not tell your story to the world through advertising. Printers' ink is the best lubricant to make the wheels of business run smoothly and constantly. Don't let the machine stall and wear out the bearings through lack of printers' oils.

Do people read advertising? Try it out by placing before anybody a score of the command ads that have made fortunes for their owners—Every one of these ads will be immediately recognized.

Unguis called at the McDonald ranch the first of the week on business.

F. P. Grohs made a trip to Klamath Falls Wednesday on business.

Alex McReynolds has returned to Langell valley after attending to his potato crop in the Malin section.

Mrs. A. L. Harp was taken to consult a physician in Klamath Falls, because of an infected finger. After having the finger lanced it is improving slowly.

The Ladies club met with Mrs. Owen Pepple at the Gillman home Thursday afternoon. A large crowd attended. Delicious refreshments were served at the close of the afternoon.

Lady Bootlegger Is Held In Jail

ROSEBURG, Oct. 31 (AP)—Mrs. Nola Wright of North Bend and C. R. Cooper, washing machine salesman of Medford, were arrested here today on a statutory charge. According to Sheriff Percy Webb, Mrs. Wright has confessed that she engaged in bootlegging operations at Coos Bay, where her husband is now serving a sentence for violation of the liquor law. Cooper and the woman were registered at a local hotel as man and wife, the officers stated. A child belonging to Mrs. Wright was left in the care of a woman at Medford, but the sheriff says he was informed by telephone this morning that the promise to pay for the support of the child had not been kept.

Famous Critic Of Kaiser Succumbs

LONDON, Oct. 31 (AP)—One of the characters who was part of the imperial atmosphere of Germany, a bitter critic of the Kaiser, has passed from the scene. Maximilian Harden, noted German editor, who founded Die Zeitschrift in 1892, died at Montan-Vernala, a Swiss resort in the valley of the Rhone, aged 66. Death was attributed to bronchitis. His passing attracted general attention as he was long known not only as a publicist, but as the man who boarded the Kaiser, between whom and Harden there was a strong mutual hatred.

League Success Is Now Assured

GENEVA, Oct. 31 (UP)—The league of nations' dream of universality practically has become a reality. The United States is now participating in virtually all league activities save those which are political and the soviet government decided Monday to take part in the league's preparatory disarmament conference. League observers contend eight years experience had demonstrated it is unimportant whether nations are members of the International body so long as they willingly cooperate in the league's activity. Both the soviet government and Turkey already are collaborating in the league's economic activities, while Mexico sent an official observer to the economic conference. Thus, Ecuador is virtually the only nation in the world not yet collaborating and, therefore, the
