The Day of Thanksgiving

In our thriving little valley—

On this peaceful morn all heads are turned toward heaven to give thanks to our God and the many things the entire country has to be thankful for.

Here nestled in our own thriving little valley will be found every family celebrating one of the greatest days of the three hundred and sixty-five.

The Pilgrim fathers were in an age of warfare; luxuries and comforts were fewer than any of us now have; they knew not the possibilities of the vast country they had inhabited—so it behooves each one of us to offer our individual thanks to the Father above for the blessings bestowed upon us in the year gone by.

Unfold the pages of history—we find progress in every line of industry—governments functioning separately and jointly in harmony—wars where nations and even states have fought for supremacy—over three hundred years of accomplishment since the day our forefathers and the Indians joined in one great day of Thanksgiving.

It is a day when the wheels of industry stop. Laborer and capitalist alike partake in the event of expressing thanks to one another.
