Klamath Folks Are Thankful
Pacific is thankful he has a new office right on Main street where he can see more of the Klamath population and be closer to the good places to eat, and he is thankful that this city is making steady strides in railroad development.

"Well," said Ed Vannice of the Golden Rule store, "when the roast turkey comes on the table I will begin to feel glad that I can afford the bird. Yes, I guess with the day off I can be thankful of a great deal."

L. L. Hendricks of Carrins drugstore, expressed gratitude for Klamath's beautiful climate, which, his friends submit, is a mighty unselfish "thank" in view of the fact that Hendricks sells the pills which make sick folks well.

Lois Ryan, formerly on the News editorial staff and now connected with the Coos Bay Times, is here to spend the Thanksgiving holidays and is thankful to be back in Klamath.

Harry W. Poole says he's always thankful because in times of adversity he rejoices that the bad breaks aren't worse.

Jim Hilton, county jailer, is glad he's got a bigger jail in which to enjoy Thanksgiving dinner—inmates at Jim's establishment are thankful they're not in a bigger one.

Ruth's Hope Has Changed To Tears
The court of appeals in Albany set their executions for the murder of Albert Snyder for the week of January 5.

Mrs. Snyder and Gray were told that there were two glimmers of hope for them, clemency from Governor Alfred E. Smith, or a report by the jury commission that they were insane. They found little cheer in either prospect. Apparently neither did those closest to them.

"I have nothing to say—we have done everything we could although of course we shall keep on trying," said Gray's lawyer after seeing him. "He is bearing up like a man."

Mrs. Brown was muffled in the same dingy black coat with a bedraggled fur collar she wore at the trial. She came to the prison alone, and left alone, scuffling at the side of principal keeper John Sheehy to dodge photographers.

"When Ruth is in her grave, maybe you will let her alone—this persecution and curiosity is unbearable," said Mrs. Brown.

"Why, oh why, does the world want to know about our misery?"

21, but Aiello fears he won't be here to answer when his name is called at that time and the Capone men know he will not be. His only hope is to escape from the city. He has pleaded for a truce with the Capones and his plea was refused. He has asked police protection and that will be refused unless he volunteers to leave the United States.

Veterans' Peace Move Presented
WASHINGTON, Nov. 23. (AP)—Legislation which is desired by two of the veterans' organizations was presented to President Coolidge by Commander Shafter of the American Legion and Commander Strayer of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The Legion reiterated its intention of pushing for the passage of a universal draft act which would conscript both money and resources in time of war.

A few jeers such as "white collar vassals," "tools of capitalism" and "slaves," shouted in broken English, started the trouble.

Enraged men closed in on the demonstrators. Police surrounded the little band, and with swinging clubs, forced the crowd back.
