When a Girl Loves

tion concerning traveling by water that it realized the necessity of establishing a personal information bureau, she was told.

"They want someone to take charge of the New York branch—someone who has traveled abroad and will be competent to give helpful advice upon any subject pertaining to ocean voyaging," the head of the agency explained.

"I've seen a few of the letters they have received from people who have booked passage, or propose to, and the nature of some of these inquiries is amazing. For instance, they want to know what to wear, and how they can get a seat at the captain's table; or whether it's proper to strike up an acquaintance with fellow passengers, how much to tip and what to do for seasickness."

"I'm sure I'd like the position," Virginia enthused. "What is the salary?"

"Sixty dollars a week to begin with. As soon as the usefulness of the bureau is established there will be a larger appropriation made for it, I understand."

Virginia hesitated a moment. "I'd have liked more," she said, "but I think I can earn my salary in this work. I'll take it if my application will be accepted."

"I can assure you of that. The matter came up just this morning and I suggested you for the place at once. We'd have telephoned for you if you hadn't come in. If you are free you might go down and see Mr. Welkin. I told him we would communicate with you immediately. I felt sure you would want to accept."

"Thank you very much, Miss Stope. Is there time before lunch?"

"Yes, if you hurry. He won't go out before one, he said. I will telephone that you're on the way. And I hope you will take the position." She smiled. "We're very pleased to have your services to offer, Miss Hewwater?"

Virginia smiled back at her radiantly. It was a relief to feel that she had at last found something to suit both her taste and her ability.

Possessed of a feeling that she had gained a step on firmer ground, she hurried to the lower end of Manhattan on a subway way. And I hope you will take the position." She smiled. "We're troubled her greatly occupied her mind and lodged there to cast a shadow upon the bright prospect of the day.
