McKINLEY'S PURSUE SHOT

MANILLA, P. I., Jan. 16. (Wednesday)—Allan McDaniel, assistant purser of the President McKinley, died here today of a bullet wound which apparently was inflicted by an unknown person, who stood on the wharf at which the vessel was docked, and fired through a port hole.

Victor McLaglen Has Experience To Back Up Film

Victor McLaglen's varied travels and long association with railroad stations in all sections of the universe gave him a rich supply of mannerisms to incorporate in the characterization of his role in "Strong Boy," production directed by John Ford.

Ever since McLaglen, as a minor, ran away from home to join the British army and fight in the Boer war, he has been more or less in constant touch with railway depots in the large and small centers of population. In "Strong Boy" he portrayed a character universally known as a "baggage smasher," and into this interpretation McLaglen poured every remembrance he had of the stalwart huckster who man the baggage rooms.

Victor watched with interest the habits and characteristics of these baggage room habitués in the far corners of the world. He has journeyed from Norway to South Africa, and from India to the west coast of Canada with the result that the portrayal of "Strong Boy" Bloss in the Ford picture is one of universal appeal. Lorraine Joy is cast in the leading feminine role opposite McLaglen and Slim Summerville. Clyde Cook, Tom Wilson, Kent Henderson and Jack Pennick are prominent in support.

Strange Holland Costumes Arouse Veiled Chuckles

While "Christina," picturesque story of quaint Holland, is highly dramatic, the costumes worn by masculine members of the cast evoked a great deal of laughter from studio employees during the time the film was in the course of production.

Although the garments worn by Janet Gaynor were far removed from present day modes, the extreme difference of apparel was not given the humorous comment accorded to the costumes worn by Charles Morton, Rudolph Schildkraut and others.

The inhabitants of the Isle of Marken, situated off the coast of Holland, dress in a picturesque and quaint manner. For the men the outfit consists of knickerbockers of extremely wide width from which project a couple of legs which, in turn, terminate in a pair of clogs or slippers. The jecket is of short variety and a round silk hat or "sou'wester" covers the head, according to circumstance.

Nevertheless, William K. Howard, director of the production, is the first owner of the new Holland type "plus fours" or "break away" knickerbockers as Hollywood fondly terms the short pants.
