WORDS

"Some words transport us to the skies, others plunge us into abysmal gloom; some hold undisputed sway like absolute sovereigns, others do only menial service; some stab us with a dagger, others soothe like a mother's caress; some have the ingratiating modesty of a high-born maiden, others intrude like an unbidden guest; some sing in the memory like the lingering note of a nightingale, others haunt the mind like an ominous decree; some are like living personalities, others like dim memories of bygone days; some are like the dance of animated sunbeams, others like the sigh of mournful pines, some are like a beacon light, others like a flickering candle; some are like a quivering image on water, others set as a face of flint; some are like a symphony of the stars, others like jangling notes out of tune; some are hot as a fiery volcano, others cold as a winter blast; some are as soft as a whispering breeze, others loud as a cannon-peal; some are as gay as a troubadour, others somber as a starless night; some are as lustrous as a jewel, others dull as a brooding sky; some are as nimble as dancing water, others heavy as a weary footstep; some are as beautiful as the rosy flush of dawn, others ugly as a venomous toad; some are as definite as the glance of a child, others vague as a fitful dream."

ST. PAUL'S GUILD HAS BRIDGE PARTY

Members of the St. Paul's Episcopal Guild entertained at the parish house of St. Paul's Episcopal church Friday evening, when seven tables of bridge were in play. High score for the ladies was awarded Miss Helen Glover. Everett Vanderpool received high score for the men. Consolation score was won by Mrs. D. V. Kuykendall.

THE SMOCK, A VERSATILE GARMENT

The smock is a versatile garment. It serves the artist, the housewife, and the working girl. In some houses it has supplanted the house-dress, while in various shops, factories and offices it has been adopted as a uniform. Because it is the function of the smock to protect the clothing beneath, many women are prone to neglect its appearance. They feel that it doesn't matter how soiled the smock becomes as long as the garments under the smock remain clean and dainty.

No woman should permit herself to look untidy under any circumstances. Since smocks are usually made of washable fabrics, the laundering of them is a simple matter. It is poor policy to wear a smock until it becomes badly soiled, for more than one reason. Frequent light laundering is less likely to wear out a garment than rubbing a badly soiled one, and it is easier on the laundress as well. The practical woman keeps several smocks on hand.

OLD QUILTS ARE BETTER THAN NEW

If you have in your possession any old quilts, now is the time to get them out and make the most of them. Often they are used as bedspreads and sometimes are folded and laid on the foot of the bed—only if they are old and fragile, we betide the thoughtless guest who ventures to use one as an actual coverlet.

If you have no old quilts or not so many as you would like to possess, why not join the ranks of up-to-date quilt makers? It is most entertaining work and decidedly worth while, since nowadays nicely made quilts are high priced, even if they are of recent vintage.

The stores now are showing all sorts of charming cotton prints of old-time design that will make your patches look as quaint as you like. If you are fortunate enough to possess any hand-woven sheets and want to put them in some form where they will be seen to advantage, cut them up and use them for piecing—using printed linen with them if the sheets are linen.
