Mississippi Levee About to Crumble

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 24. (AP)—From softened, crumbling levee tops along half a dozen Mississippi valley streams, men looked down today upon threatening water and found in the sight sufficient cause for working the harder to hold the rivers within bounds. Near one of the levees a human body floated.

The high water in the Mississippi river and its tributaries took the season's first recorded flood death last night. Raymond Hays, 28, a plantation foreman, was drowned in Red River near Texarkana, Ark., while trying to rescue horses surrounded by the flood. In that vicinity some 4,000 acres were under water and property loss had been severe.

There were slight defections in both parties in voting on the amendment.

The ways and means committee earlier in the day had favorably reported 91 amendments and these were expected to be added to in the next few days.
