Bringing Home the Bacon

For Ginger's Sake

by ETHEL HUESTON
©1930 THE BOBBS-MERRILL CO.

Ginger Ella did not usually bother herself greatly on the subject of clothes. She was far more interested in what she should eat than where she should live.

In the earlier and more stringent paragon days she had been bound by certain rigid regulations as to Sunday and every day dresses and shoes, but in her new sartorial affluence the days of the week were as one to her. So, also were dresses. Such preference as she had was all for the thing that could be not into, and out of, with the least exertion of time and effort.

A sudden scrupulous attention-ness to details of dress is the unfailing weather-vane of a young girl's fancy.

On the occasion of the formal dance at Joe de Vivre, all of a sudden the color, cut and character of clothes took on a significance to Ginger.
