Article Deals With Bridges, Pacific Highway Construction In Shasta County, California

An article which appeared in the February issue of the magazine "California Highways and Public Works," concerning the bridging of Shasta canyon and the monumental highway undertaking, is of interest to residents of southern Oregon. Portions of this article follow:

"One of the most monumental highway undertakings now under way in the United States is the relocation of the Pacific highway along the Shasta river in Shasta county, California.

"The project is of particular interest for these reasons: TWO REASONS

"First, it completes on the California side an adequate interstate connection with Oregon. This is of importance to travel.

"Second, from the point of view of the engineers, the project is symbolic of the new era in highway construction, an era in which the expenditure of very large sums of money in short distance projects is justified by reason of heavy traffic, the large total savings that the improvement will afford to travel, and the increased measure of safety that the betterment will assure.

"The Shasta river project is 7½ miles in length and, except for the first two miles, lies entirely in the Shasta and Klamath river canyons. PUZZLE TO ENGINEERS

"The original state highway built in 1915 had become entirely inadequate for travel. Although built to what were considered satisfactory standards at the time of its construction, traffic of today found its short tangents, short radius curves, adverse grades and width of only 16 feet both inadequate and dangerous. Its improvement, however, presented a puzzling problem to engineers.

"On the one hand, reconstruction of the road to present day standards on the alignment of the old road was prohibited by the natural restrictions of the Shasta river canyon.

BRIDGES CHOSEN

"On the other hand, the relocation of the road involved enormous expenditures because of the rough and precipitous nature of the country, its high cliffs and rock so hard that it was both difficult to drill and extremely destructive to grading equipment.

"The engineers had to choose between a low grade road involving the construction of tunnels, or a higher grade line, cutting with bridges across both the lateral canyons and the main canyon of the Shasta river. The latter plan was chosen.

"Under the plan as adopted, five bridges across these canyons have been completed or are now in course of construction together with the connecting highway. The total cost of these bridges will approximate $1,671,000. The deck of the highest of these bridges is 257 feet above the river bed, and is of sufficient height above the river to clear the state capital of California were it placed beneath it.

"The cost of grading and surfacing the connecting road is estimated at $698,400. The average per mile cost of the project, including highway and bridges, accordingly will approximate $150,000.

OPENS IN JUNE

"One of the important features of early construction was the preparation of suitable detours. Insofar as possible, the old road was used. In several locations, however, it was necessary to leave the old road and cross to the other side of the Shasta river. This not only required construction of a new road, two miles in length, 16 feet in width and with an oiled rock surfacing, but it also made necessary the construction of three temporary detour bridges across the river. These detour roads and bridges have served traffic in a satisfactory manner.

"After the road has been thrown open to travel, which it is believed will be about June, 1931, the old road will be cleared of debris, and left for the use of fishermen and local residents."

FALSE TEETH

CAN NOT EMBARRASS
Most wearers of false teeth have suffered real embarrassment because their teeth dropped or slipped at just the wrong time. Do not live in fear of this happening to you. Just sprinkle a little Fasteech on your plates. Makes false teeth stay in place and feel comfortable. Sweetens breath. Get Fasteech at Star Drug Store or any other good drug store.—Adv.
