The Upstate Press Serves

JUST what the upstate press can accomplish for the upstate is not always recognized by the upstate public.

Nevertheless, it is true that the newspapers of Oregon do serve their communities in more ways than providing the news of the day.

An example worthy of note is the recent controversy over allocation of highway funds in Oregon.

When Portland and Multnomah went out for a lion's share of these funds, it was the upstate press that took up the battle cry against such tactics.

It made articulate the vigorous sentiment which immediately developed everywhere in Oregon except in Portland and Multnomah counties.

There, one heard or read frequent comment about the howl that was being made in the upstate against the metropolis, and the necessity of abandoning proposals ultra-offensive to the back country.

Who was making that howl? It was the upstate press, and what howling it did not do on its own accord it transmitted to the ears of the metropolis and the highway commission through news and editorial reports of local sentiment.

The alert and vigorous newspapers of the state deserve credit for this and many similar services they render to their constituencies.

A Chance for Local PWA Projects

ALTHOUGH just acted on here, the traffic safety and free flow section of the national recovery act sounds like the answer to a prayer. It apparently provides a method whereby much-needed projects of a certain type can be accomplished without involving the knotty question of raising a large share of the cost locally.

Under the terms of this section, a feasible public works program has been outlined for Klamath Falls. It includes half a dozen worthy projects, the accomplishment of any one of which would be a distinct benefit to the community.

The section confers upon the president of the United States the authority to make grants for emergency construction "on federal aid highways and extensions thereof into and through municipalities." The amount apportioned to any state for this purpose can be used in eliminating the hazards of vehicular and pedestrian traffic. It is possible that the words "and extensions thereof" give a great deal of latitude in locating the projects on important traffic arteries.

Klamath Falls has an opportunity to win much-needed improvements in this method. The Esplanade unit would provide a new, attractive and unobstructed route into the city from the north, and would eliminate the old bridge over the canal and the hazardous center support in the Esplanade underpass. The East Main street unit would provide an underpass at the railroad tracks, eliminating a serious traffic and fire hazard, and possibly a new East Main bridge. On South Sixth street, sidewalk construction has long been a crying need, and it may be provided under this plan, as well as widening of the dangerously narrow viaduct. The Oregon avenue project, from Bienn street to the Fremont bridge, would eliminate an extremely bad stretch of road.

This program is comprehensive. Perhaps some of the projects may be eliminated by PWA authorities, and perhaps there may be a hitch to the whole scheme.

But it is advisable to make a bold bid if any. The intent and purpose of the recovery act is to provide employment for the idle, and if it is shown that we have the idle, and worthy projects to put men to work, there is a chance.

There seems to be a clause in the national recovery act providing funds for certain projects without requiring a local contribution. It might appropriately be called the Santa Clause.

News Behind the News

The Inside Story From The Capital

By PAUL MALLON

Copyright, 1933, by Paul Mallon

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—The Tammany Indians are folding up their wigwams and stentily slipping out on Mayor O'Brien. Most are stealing into the McKee camp, planning to scalp a little patronage if the independent democrat wins.

But the startling thing is that these defections, even coupled with conservative Wall Street support of McKee, may not be enough to put him over.

At least that is the striking summary of the inside situation brought to the inner circle here by one of the most astute politicians who ever phlegmated an election.

FOX This confidential report indicates that the foxy Fiorello La Guardia worked out a winning strategy before McKee got into the race.

Apparently La Guardia circulated all the loose politicians and received promises of support. These were made public before General Farley brought McKee out.

There is one thing a politician cannot do and that is desert a man he has publicly agreed to support. If he does he is marked for life. No one would trust him thereafter. Even Farley's prestige cannot get over that hurdle.

SALARIES Fiorello also is making the most of his record in the house against tax cuts. He has promised city employees there will be no reduction in salaries. This gets him a sizeable class of professional voters who never fail to register—all relatives and friends of public employees.

DRIFT The popular drift now is supposed to be in McKee's direction. Whether it will be strong enough to cut down La Guardia's existing lead is a question. The best political prophets doubt it. The stiletto has been liberally used in past New York elections. It always creates a preliminary element of doubt. Some very popular candidates have awakened on election day to find it sticking in their backs.

You can never tell for sure who your friends are until the votes are counted.

IMPORTANCE The election is of great national importance.

If La Guardia wins, he will become one of the most important figures in the republican party. In his campaign he has made peace with the conservative republican elements. That strange liaison may not last long but it will be of importance everywhere as long as it lasts.

Unless McKee wins, General Farley will probably have to leave town. His judgment, prestige and influence are vitally at stake.

RUMBLINGS General Johnson and George Peek have agreed to let bygones be bygones, but there is still bad blood underneath between the NRA and the A. A. A.

The Wallace-Tugwell crowd still looks on the Johnson-Peek clan as non-conformists, and vice versa.

The situation is not so serious that it will interfere with efforts to harmonize the policies of the two outfits, but it has long range possibilities. Many insiders believe the government service is not big enough to hold both clans indefinitely.

The betting seems to favor ultimate retention of the Wallace-Tugwell group. They are supposed to have the inside track at the White House.

HARMONY Efforts to harmonize the programs of the two outfits is a real bit of inside news.

Several meetings were secretly

SIDE GLANCES by George Clark

"You haven't been on time once since we were married."

held within the last few days. They brought no concrete results.

The task is difficult if not insurmountable. The two plans have different fundamental theories. The NRA seeks primarily to raise purchasing power by spreading work and boosting wages, thus raising industrial prices. The A. A. A. primarily is trying to make the farmer's dollar purchase as much as it did before the war. Every time the NRA sends industrial prices up, the job of the A. A. A. becomes that much more difficult.

A harmonizing statement may be issued in a few days. A master of words will be needed to compose it.

TRUST Prof. Warren never talks. He is the most mysterious person in the government. He has not opened his mouth in three months for fear he might say something. There are reports that he sleeps with a clothes-pin on his lip.

Therefore the story does not come from him but it is nevertheless true that he did not find out Mr. Roosevelt had adopted the gold theory until a day or two before the announcement was made.

The professor was at his labors at Cornell last week when he received Mr. Roosevelt's summons. He had not heard from the president in such a long time, he thought his plan had been dropped. He arrived here the Friday or Saturday before the speech.

But that is nothing compared with the ignorance of the federal reserve board on the subject. It is supposed to know everything about money in advance.

The board not only had no advance information but it could not find out what the policy meant even after the announcement was made. Its meeting here Monday had to be adjourned so the matter could be explained.

Apparently Henry Morgenthau was the only government official trusted with advance knowledge of the project.

The same secrecy system is being kept up in announcing new gold prices. Prof. Warren whispers the price to Mr. Roosevelt who whispers it to Mr. Morgenthau who whispers it to Mr. Jesse Jones who makes the announcement to the world.

Jones and his colleague, Harvey Couch, have very little advance data.

the states, the cities and the various taxing districts.

That is to say, he combined debt of the people on their homes, plus the public debt of the federal government, the cities, the states and the various taxing districts, amounts to about sixty billion dollars.

BUT let's go on.

The Home Owners Loan Corporation tells us that in addition the debt of all the railroads and all the public utilities in the United States amounts to about $5 billion dollars, which brings us up to a total of $65 billion.

Add to this the farm mortgage debt, as to whose total this writer has at hand at the moment no exact figures, and the various private debts of private individuals not included in the foregoing classifications, and it becomes apparent that the GRAND TOTAL of our indebtedness of all kinds and for all purposes has reached a figure that is truly astounding.

IT IS because of this tremendous total of public and private debt that the demand for inflation, in some form or other, has reached its present proportions.
