STATE SESSION WILL OBSERVE SCHOOL FIGHT

STATE HOUSE, Salem, Ore., Nov. 13. (UP)—Some change in Oregon's system of higher education control appeared a certainty today as legislators began to return to the capitol.

Veteran legislators predicted that numerous educational bills would be presented during the special session which opens November 20. So higher education will probably take its place along side of liquor control and unemployment relief as a leading issue before the coming session.

Lawmakers Divided
The legislature will be divided into three camps: University of Oregon supporters who oppose Chancellor William J. Kerr; Oregon State college followers who favor retention of Dr. Kerr; and a group who have no definite ties, but who favor solution of the troublesome problem.

The educational squabble has become known in California and Washington and many other states. Legislators believe this issue of policy is bad for the state, not to mention the injury it does to higher education within the state.

Peace Plans Form
Numerous plans for bringing peace to the state's educational program are being suggested. A return to control of the two institutions by separate boards of regents has been suggested by some. Others support the present set-up, but argue that the board of higher education erred in its failure to appoint as chancellor someone not previously connected with either institution.

The board of higher education personnel, as provided by the legislature, provides for one representative from the university and one from the college. This provision was included to avoid conflict. The act was virtually nullified by the board's selection of chancellor, some legislators argue. Others, however, believe Dr. Kerr is too big a man to permit past loyalties to affect his official position.

State senators and representatives alike have followed closely editorial comment of Oregon newspapers pertaining to the bitter fight which resulted in Roosevelt Nelson resigning as chairman of the board of higher education.

Hardly a legislator calls at the capitol without discussing the educational problem. Many of them produce editorial clippings. The press has virtually issued a mandate for an immediate change.

Mahoney Urges Klamath People To Aid Drive

Every citizen has a place in the American Red Cross and I am sure that every person able to do so will respond instantly to the invitation to join during the annual Roll Call, November 14-30.

As Mayor of Klamath Falls I have seen the remarkable service performed by the Red Cross for needy individuals and families of this community.

The local chapter has demonstrated fine efficiency in distributing food, clothing, and other forms of relief. The unemployed, the ex-service men, the ill, the victims of disaster, have manifold reasons to be grateful to the Red Cross.

In tornado, flood and earthquake, the Red Cross, as always, has been the agency of rescue and rehabilitation. It is indeed comforting to know that such an organization as the American Red Cross is always ready to succor any stricken community.

In the fields of public health nursing, home care of sick, life-saving, first aid and Junior Red Cross, this national relief agency has continued its fine service to humanity.

Today's needs are acute. Tomorrow's needs may be as great, or greater. We must keep our Red Cross prepared with funds. We need the Red Cross all the time—and the Red Cross needs us now.

As Mayor of Klamath Falls, I therefore, remind our citizens that the enlistment period is at hand. Let's make this year's Roll Call of the Red Cross the most successful we have ever held.

Signed: W. E. MAHONEY, Mayor.

WEED-KLAMATH CONTRACT UP NEXT JANUARY

Contracts for surfacing the Weed-Klamath Falls highway from Midland to the California line will be by the state highway commission on January 18. Engineers estimate the cost at about $98,000.

This will put a final surface on the section of the road now being graded by the Dunn and Baker company of Klamath Falls. It will complete the Weed-Klamath road allocation, made on June 23.

Earl C. Reynolds, secretary of the Klamath county chamber of commerce, brought this information back from Portland, where he conferred with R. H. Baldock, state highway engineer.

Reynolds said that the remaining part of the Weed-Klamath project will be provided for in the proposed public works loan sought by the state highway commission. About $400,000 is needed to build the Weed road from Midland to a point on the Greensprings highway near the Miller packing plant.

Reynolds said this $400,000 is in the first $5,000,000 loan to be sought by the highway board. Some time ago, the board asked for $15,000,000, but the state PWA advisory board advised that this amount be broken up into smaller loans.

On December 7, the state highway commission will receive bids on the new bridge to be built across the irrigation canal this side of Henley, on the Dallas-California highway. This is a $7000 job.

On November 15, bids will be opened on the new bridge to be built across the Williamson river, on the Chiloquin secondary highway. The cost is estimated at $13,400.

PRUNING METHOD AIDS YIELD

DALLAS—Harvest records on the Andrew Vercler prune orchard near West Salem on which County Agent J. R. Beck conducted a "thinning out" pruning demonstration this year for the sixth time, showed that the plots pruned by this method yielded 50 per cent more prunes than did the check plots. Dry-out and size figures are not yet available on this demonstration.

Dairy's Case Set Tuesday Morning

A hearing of the case of the city vs. the Lost River Dairy and R. C. Woodruff, manager, charged with violation of the city beer ordinance, is scheduled for Tuesday morning before Police Judge Richmond.

The Lost River Dairy is alleged to have sold a quantity of beer without proper revenue stamps.

INTEREST BRINGS MORE THAN LOANS

SALEM, Ore., Nov. 13. (UP)—Is the state of Oregon too much of a miser?

State Treasurer Rufus C. Holman thinks so, he said today. He announced he will propose legislation to provide for amortization of loans made by the state land board.

Holman pointed out 153 loans made by the state board have been more than repaid in interest, but principal is still owed by property owners. Some loans have been renewed time after time, with nothing paid on principal. In many cases borrowers have had loans increased for larger amounts on renewal to make up for delinquent interest.

In Benton county one borrower has paid $5,125 interest on an original loan of $2,500. He still owes $2,000 of the principal. A $2,380 Clackamas county loan has paid $3,524.50 with principal still due. From a $2,500 Deschutes county loan the state has realized $2,471 interest.

Holman's proposal would provide for amortization of loans on some plan similar to that of federal farm loans. The borrower would repay the interest and principal together, with the loan wiped out at the end of a certain number of years.

In Klamath county six loans totaling $10,175 have paid $13,641 interest.

"We are going ahead with the inquiry. You can draw your own conclusions. That's all I have to say."

The White House made no comment.

Dickstein told newspapermen "we are going to get the facts of Nazi propaganda and we can't have the public interfering with our inquiry." He said "much of our investigation will be conducted in executive session."
