High School Improvements

KLAMATH Union high school's bond issue has been approved by a narrow majority. Advertising of the bonds for sale will proceed, and some construction work will be done this year.

Taxpayers of the Union high school district, who will retire this bond issue, have the assurance that the construction program is the result of serious and careful study on the part of school officials. They can have the satisfaction of knowing that, on the very face of the situation, there is a serious problem which their money will help to solve. In other words, they need not feel that they are paying for unnecessary improvements.

No reasonable person has questioned the need for more classrooms. The high school student body definitely has grown beyond the capacity of the present building. Ten new classrooms will be constructed.

There was some question in the minds of many people of the advisability of going into debt at this time for a physical education building. It is true, however, that state education authorities have upped the physical education requirements for high school graduates, and that it would be well-nigh impossible to meet these requirements at this high school without expanding facilities.

There has been considerable feeling here that there should be more adequate industrial education in the high school, in view of the industrial nature of this community. The extension of shop facilities is designed to meet that demand.

The improvements now authorized should care for the situation for some years to come. Meanwhile, it is to be hoped a co-operative program may be worked out whereby a junior high school system here may be developed, thus averting the necessity of further expansion at the high school in the near future. The institution otherwise is in danger of becoming top-heavy. It is generally conceded that a junior high school program is needed, but that the closest co-operation between the elementary and high school districts would be essential to such a program. Certainly such co-operation should be possible.

New Sit-Down Proposed

A SIT-DOWN strike against drunken drivers by women of the country is urged by Norman Damon, manager of the safety department of the Automobile Manufacturers association. He wants women to refuse to ride with drunken drivers. Said Damon:

By establishing a practice of this kind, women would not only be saved serious risks of their own lives, but would place a social stigma upon riding with drinking drivers.

Something, certainly, is needed to drive home the lesson. Figures from police and motor vehicle departments throughout the country show that people generally have not yet taken to heart the truism that gasoline and alcohol do not mix.

Mr. Damon's plan, however, doesn't take into consideration the fact that not all drunken drivers are men. Women would do well to resolve not only to refuse to ride with drunken drivers, but to refuse to drive when they, themselves, have been drinking.

The Family Doctor

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

The amount of food you require depends not only on your work, but also on your size. A man five feet eight inches tall and weighing 150 pounds requires about 1500 calories a day if he spends all his time in bed. If he gets up and moves around, he needs more calories.

If you live a quiet, retired life, you can keep your weight constant with about 2000 calories per day. A university professor active in teaching might require 2500 calories per day. A lumberman or a bricklayer might require as much as 3000 calories in 24 hours.

Brain work does not use up many calories but produces a type of exhaustion which demands rest rather than food.

If you eat 500 calories a day more than you use up, your weight will increase about one pound a week.

There is a tendency among women to change in weight. A young girl, as they have children and as they approach middle age.

The commonest age for the beginning of overweight in women is between 20 and 40 years of age.

In the period preceding and following childbirth a woman is likely to rest much more than before and also to eat much more. It is necessary, therefore, for her to watch her weight particularly at such times.

Frequently it is assumed that temperament is an important factor in causing overweight and that the frequent, rapid motions in which a high-strung individual indulges burn up fuel which an easy-going person stores up in his body. The popular conception of stout people is that they are easy going and quiet.

Actually, however, 60 per cent of people who are overweight and who were examined in one clinic were found to be of excitable and nervous disposition.

Christian Science

"Christian Science" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ.

The Golden Text was, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. 11:9).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass. He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he" (Deut. 32:2, 4).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following correlative passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "No human pen nor tongue taught me the Science contained in this book. Science and Health; and neither tongue nor pen can overthrow it. This book may be distorted by shallow criticism or by careless or malicious students, and its ideas may be temporarily abused and misrepresented; but the Science and truth therein will forever remain to be discerned and demonstrated" (p. 110).

Behind the Scenes in Washington

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON, June 29.—As to the numerous rumors concerning the sudden departure of Vice President Jack Garner from his job as presiding officer of the Senate:

The essential reason was that Garner and President Roosevelt had split widely apart on the issues of labor and relief, and that Roosevelt had undertaken on at least two occasions to give the vice president mild private spankings for what he considered efforts to sabotage his policies. Garner is 67 years old and does not like to be spanked. He does not like to be around Washington in the summer time, either.

He dropped the word around that he was thinking of taking off for his home in Uvalde, Tex., about the first of June, but failed to get a rise out of the President. Then he advised Roosevelt in person that he would like to take a vacation. Whether he expected in reply a plea that he stay on the job is a matter of guesswork, as Jack told no one. But what Roosevelt said was that he thought it would be a good idea.

Word was given out that the vice president would be gone only two or three weeks. But he told close friends he would be back by Aug. 1 if Congress hadn't quit by then. Actually, he needn't be expected back at this session. Undoubtedly he would be willing to return and break a tie vote on a compromise plan if he were needed. But the administration won't force a court vote if it looks as close as that.

Indicates Growing Insurgency

Specifically, Garner gave secret backing to Senator Jimmy Byrnes in the latter's attempt to make Roosevelt publicly condemn sit-down strikes and to cut the federal relief appropriation from $1,500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. He has also favored Byrnes' elevation to the Senate majority leadership in case Roosevelt can be persuaded to appoint Leader Joe Robinson to the Supreme Court. Knowing that the White House would want Senator Barkley of Kentucky to succeed Robinson.

Garner, however, has been willing to go along with Roosevelt on the Supreme Court issue. The incident of his retreat to

... and Labor Only

Some of the diners at Pierre's restaurant one evening before the steel strikes were more than moderately surprised to observe Mr. and Mrs. John L. Lewis at the same table with the arch-conservative Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth and her brother, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr. Conversation appeared to be animated and at one point became so loud that Teddy Roosevelt was heard to exclaim:

"What I'm interested in is this struggle, is what's going to become of people like my sister and me!"

"I'm not concerned with that," replied Lewis, placing both hands on the table. "I'm interested in labor."

Uvalde is chiefly significant in its relationship to the growing divergence between Roosevelt and conservative senators, chiefly from the south, who hope to block further presidential reform efforts and to dictate the democratic nomination in 1940.

Follow the Polecat's Trail

Attorney General Homer Cummings keeps on receiving to end of remarkable suggestions for curbing the crime problem, indicating that Yankee ingenuity and inventive genius are far from dead.

Many of the numerous proposals for thwarting bank robbers contain diagrams for traps. One plan is for a trap door to be placed in front of each cashier's window. When the holdup man appeared with his gun, the teller would push a button and the bank robber would fall into a chute, at the end of which would be a net. As the robber fell into the net a string around it would tighten, closing the net and suspending him from the ceiling.

To keep bad men from jumping on automobile running boards someone else suggests all cars be built with retractable running boards and door knobs. Whereas, if you want to catch all criminals—Cummings is advised—you merely have a bell ring at a certain time all over the country, whereupon everybody runs to the nearest school house to register and be fingerprinted, and the fingerprints are sent to Washington so all the crooks can be identified.

"Have every bank teller's window, every industrial payroll desk or window and every money-carrying bag equipped with a high pressure type of Skunk Oil Vapor spray, that could be released silently and automatically on the clothes of these thugs," writes another inspired genius. "And from what I hear the only way to rid oneself of this vile odor is to burn the clothes, and this can't be done in such a hurry before detection."
