Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Whether albumin is found in the urine may depend, of course, on the delicacy of the tests that are made. When the ordinary chemical test was made in a group of 400 men, only 2 per cent were found with albumin.

In an average group of men, 5 per cent will be found to have albumin by the ordinary test. However, if a large group of sick people are examined, a much larger per cent will be found with albumin at some stage of the illness.

If the albumin gets into the urine from the kidneys, the condition is called renal albuminuria. If it gets into the urine from the ureters or the bladder or the urethra—the tubes and organs through which it must pass before it is excreted, the condition is called nonrenal albuminuria.

Three kinds of renal albuminuria are recognized: First, that in which there is a definite inflammation or disease of the kidney itself; second, when there is a disease in other organs or tissues affecting the kidneys; and third, when the action of the kidneys is temporarily disturbed without any real disease.

The last mentioned type is called benign albuminuria because it is not really a disease.

When there is real disease of the kidneys, the condition is serious and important. Examples are the various forms of Bright's disease, tumors of the kidney, the disease of the kidney that takes place in pregnancy or in gout, changes in the circulation of the blood in the kidney, infection of the kidneys with the formation of pus, and finally the damage to the kidneys that may occur from the pressure of stones.

In cases of the second type, exceedingly hard muscular work, exposure to severe cold, over-eating of protein substances, anemia, scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria, erysipelas, smallpox, pneumonia and similar conditions may be associated with albumin coming from the kidneys.

When people are poisoned by lead, mercury, arsenic or phosphorus; sometimes when they have taken too much alcohol and sometimes when they have been severely burned, albumin will appear in the urine.

Sometimes the albumin is associated with disturbances of the circulation. There are forms of changes in the kidney cells which are only temporary in many instances.

Least well understood is that form of albuminuria which is called benign. This may even appear in association with severe emotional states, sometimes in students who are cramming for examination or in football players after a game.

It is found in the children of the very poor when they suffer from malnutrition.

Sometimes the albuminuria that is benign is associated with change in posture. It occurs only when the person stands erect and disappears when he is at rest. This has been called orthostatic albuminuria when it occurs in young people who have an exaggerated spinal curve in the small of the back.

All sorts of theories have been advanced as to the reason for this but none of them has been established as the real cause.

Of an aggregate population of 127,341,300 in the United States in 1935, there were 64,161,000 males and 63,180,300 females.

STAR PICKET LINE DWINDLES RAPIDLY

SEATTLE, July 12 (AP)—The Seattle Star published editions regularly today with but one American Newspaper Guild strike picket in sight and five policemen guarding the entrances. Negotiations between management and guildsmen of the news, advertising and circulation departments remained deadlocked. Affected departments were manned by skeleton staffs again today.

Mayor John F. Dore had said police would break up any picket-line, but the guild announced it planned only "peaceful picketing" 100 feet from the building and that action would depend on the police attitude.

"If pickets are arrested we will halt them out and seek an injunction demanding authorities abide by the law," the guild said.

E. W. Scripps, chairman of the board of the Scripps League of newspapers, said the paper would continue efforts to publish with a skeleton crew as long as possible to avoid hiring new men to replace strikers.

He said the newspaper's invitation to guild members to return to work had been ignored.
