EAST SIDE FIRM HAS ANNIVERSARY

East Side Appliances this week is celebrating its first anniversary in the location at 401 South Sixth street and almost three years of successful and continuously growing operation, according to Lew Bideler, sales manager.

Each year has proved a milestone in the growth of East Side Appliances, Bideler said. Starting as a department of East Side Electric in October 1937, when Ray Bigger added General Electric appliances at 623 Klamath avenue, the first step in enlarging came when Bideler took over the sales management in June, 1938 and immediately added several new lines, including Gibson refrigerators and ranges and Evanol heaters and furnaces.

East Side Electric received the first carload of Evanol heaters shipped to the Pacific coast. Now the appliance department, known as East Side Appliances, has more than 1000 Evanol heaters placed in homes and buildings in the Klamath basin territory.

With the addition of new lines, it was found necessary to separate the two operations of East Side Electric, so the appliance department moved to the Pelican theatre building in June, 1939 and assumed the name of East Side Appliances.

In less than a year, however, it was found that even this location did not provide enough space for the increase in business, so another move was made on March 23, 1940, to South Sixth street. And in less than a year, Bideler points out, he had to enlarge the display space by half in order to show the increasing number of lines added since the move.

East Side Appliances now is a complete home furnishings store, Bideler said. Fashion Flow furniture, Sealy mattresses and springs, Mohawk rugs, Congolium and other lines of nationally known home furnishings were added early this month. The store still carries the famous Evanol heaters and furnaces, Gibson refrigerators and ranges, Easy washers and irons, Farnsworth and Philco radios, and small electric appliances.

In addition to selling home furnishings, Bideler said, "East Side Appliances maintains a service department that is unsurpassed. We are equipped to take care of any kind of home appliances."

VALUABLE COWS

MIDDLEBOURNE, W. Va. (AP)—William Mercer's cows showed him where to find oil, the farmer told friends.

Mercer noticed his cows' noses were greasy and their milk had a gaseous odor. Then he found oil covering his spring and gas bubbling up, so he built a dam. Now he is collecting about a barrel of crude oil a day.

He attributed the oil in the water to repressuring activities in an old oil field.

Albert Spalding, Violinist To Appear Here Tuesday

The violin used by Albert Spalding, great American violinist who plays here Tuesday night, April 1, at the Pelican theatre under the auspices of the Klamath Community Concert association, was made by Joseph Guarnerius (del Gesù) in 1755. For over 100 years this violin attracted the attention of connoisseurs. It was brought out of Italy to France by Tarisio, a well-known expert of a century or more ago. He took it to Vuillaume, one of the best violin makers of his time. Vuillaume was greatly impressed by its beauty and used it as a model for his own work.

Since that time, it has been chiefly in the hands of collectors, having been owned successively by the Marquis de Sear, the Comte d'Armaille, and by Colonel Le Maistre. In 1913, it was acquired by Albert Spalding, and since then he has used it continuously in his concerts.

The character of the violin is emphasized by its very bold F holes, its rugged appearance, and the richness and brilliancy of its color. The quality of its tone is very deep and rich—in the lower registers somewhat recalling the poignancy of a viola.

Mr. Spalding lavishes great care on his Guarnerius and on his famous "Artot" violin made by Antonio Stradivarius in 1722.

"The care of old violins," says Mr. Spalding, "is something like the care taken of rare old wines—they are very subject to atmospheric and climatic changes and it is very advisable when transporting a violin from one country to another where there is moisture or to a drier climate, to watch the instrument closely, for it is likely on such occasions to become unglued sometimes almost imperceptibly."

"It is injurious for a violin to be exposed to cold or heat, especially artificial heat, so that I always try to keep the temperature very even, and mixed with moisture when there is steam heat. In order to bring out this moisture, I usually have pans of water placed on or near the radiators to mitigate the aridity produced by steam."

Mr. Spalding says that he fights an incessant warfare against the powers-that-be that overheat most of our hotels and trains.

Of the rosin dust which naturally accumulates on a violin Mr. Spalding declares that he polishes his fiddle after a performance, preferably with a piece of foulard silk to remove all particles of rosin, dust and also perspiration. He also carries out this polishing operation daily following his practice periods.
