Key To Trouble

By Earl Whitlock
I mislaid my keys, the other day and for a time I was greatly perturbed. There were my car keys and my door keys and the key to my private drawer and a number of others, each representing some possession that I felt I had to lock away from the rest of the world.

It struck me that keys are the penalty of civilization. No matter how simply you try to arrange your life, you probably have certain keys to certain belongings. Even if you have only a suitcase in a room in a boarding house, you still have to carry keys to the suitcase, the room and the front door.

And each key on your keyring is a source of potential trouble. It is a symbol of responsibility. It represents something you can worry about. And everything you feel obliged to put a lock on, means more worry.

I have a feeling that if one would select a hundred men at random, study their faces for lines of care, and then count the number of keys they carry, one might find that the man with the most keys would be the man with the most worried expression. "Visit with the Flowers in Memory Garden."

Next Friday Mr. Whitlock of the Earl Whitlock Funeral Home will comment on Memorial Day.

KLAMATH JURY OUSTED AFTER MEET MONDAY

just have a chair—I'll tell you something right now, Mr. Baker. This grand jury has been in session two and a half years. Is that not right?

BAKER: Five terms, yes. THE COURT: And through that five terms there have been apparently one or more grand jurors who had the idea they are running this court. I believe you are one of them.

BAKER: I do not quite understand. THE COURT: I say, one or more of the grand jurors has the idea in his head he is running the court. I believe you are one of them.

BAKER: Running the court? THE COURT: Yes.

BAKER: No. THE COURT: You have not? I believe you have. And I'll tell you something else: I believe it was this political mix-up—that is your idea for calling the grand jury in at this time. I believe it is more political than anything else.

BAKER: I am sure I do not know anything about politics.

THE COURT: I'm sure I don't either, but I just have a very good idea that is one of your big reasons in calling in the grand jury; and the grand jury in this county, or any other county—the purpose is not to operate it for any political faction, or any politics. It is set out plainly by law what its duties are. I believe that is the reason two members of the grand jury are not here today.

BAKER: I don't understand it.

THE COURT: Whether you understand it or not, as I said before, the grand jury is discharged.

BAKER: Your honor, I'll accept your resignation—your discharge, but I think that this grand jury will be watching later as to this.

THE COURT: Just a minute. I'm going to tell you something else: Just another remark like that and I'll cite you for contempt of court. There is no more grand jury and you are subject

Colt Born on Main Street at Sprague River

SPRAGUE RIVER—Mr. and Mrs. Mario Carnini, owners of the Wooden Box cafe here were baffled by the appearance of a mare that stood by their kitchen door and refused to leave. They could not understand the horse's desire to stay so patiently unless the aroma of food drifting out the door prompted the animal to seek a handout of a lettuce salad or a stack of hotcakes. The surprise came later when the mare gave birth to a colt not more than a few steps from the main business street. A large crowd gathered to greet the arrival which will bear the distinction of being an urban product.

The mother seemed to appreciate the admiring audience and left her baby on exhibition most of the morning. Soon the little fellow got its strength and waddled away to distant pastures with its mother.

to the same rules as the rest of them are.

BAKER: Okey.

THE COURT: Now you just watch, but be careful you are not watched—get that in your mind; you and your famous pen-and-ink order might be watched. We will have the next grand jury do it. There will be no mileage on this grand jury because they were never called.

County Clerk Mae K. Short, under whose charge the court clerkship functions, said after the court session that the jury summons was sent from her office after Baker, as foreman of the grand jury, requested that the notices be sent out. She said that Baker came from the circuit judge's office one day last week and instructed the clerk that the notices be dispatched to the grand jurors.

While Baker did not state what matter he intended should be brought before the grand jury, it was reported at the courthouse he referred to the jury's investigation some months ago of the so-called "cash box fund" that was set up for the handling of improvements on roads not on the county road system and therefore not eligible for financing from the county road fund. The system was that residents on such roads would make deposits in this fund and disbursements would then be made from it for the non-county road improvements near their property. The grand jury some time ago ordered this fund discontinued, and later the court announced a revolving fund had been set up under advice of state auditors for handling the non-county road improvements.

The "pen and ink" order referred to by Judge Vandenberg was an order signed by members of the grand jury in open court, at the suggestion of former Circuit Judge Edward B. Ashhurst. The jurors on that occasion had brought in a report on gambling; the judge wrote out another report in pen and ink and gave it to the jurors to sign. All but one, Guy Barton, signed. Barton has since resigned from the jury.

soon overtake and bring it into battle to completely avenge the loss of the Hood and most of her 1,341 British officers and men who died.

Heavy Armor The success of the bombers of the British fleet's air arm in hunting down the Bismarck and carrying home their attack apparently defeated the German warship's erratic efforts to slip through the screen of British warships and planes and reach the comparative safety of German or Norwegian waters.

The Bismarck is so heavily armored, however, it probably would take six or eight aerial torpedoes to sink her or put her out of action.

night voted to request the civil aeronautics board to give favorable consideration to the applications of private airlines to operate plane service into Klamath Falls. The United Airlines application, which would give Klamath daily service after the airport construction is concluded, was recommended against by CAB examiners, but final action has not been taken.

No Fishing

The council put the ban on fishing from the Fremont bridge, and ordered a "NO FISHING" sign posted there. Traffic hazards prompted the action.

Mayor John Houston, who promised last week to "awing into action" on the Peyton wood-yard problem at Cook and Uerlings street, produced results. The council received a letter from Oscar Peyton offering to trade the Cook and Uerlings property for city property on Market street. The deal was approved, with the understanding that Peyton pay in cash $306, the difference between the appraised value of the city's property and the Peyton property. The matter of cleaning up the woodyard was discussed at some length. Councilman Cantrill suggested the police judge's office establish an "irregularity file" where will be kept a record of all matters taken up by the council which include special provisions.

Asks USO Fund

Mayor Houston spoke at some length on the success of the city's hospitality effort in behalf of last week's visiting army men. He praised the community hospitality committee headed by Fred Heilbronner.

The mayor asked the committee to consider a request that the city raise $2000 for the united service organizations, who are providing recreation for the military services. Heilbronner asked to be excused from chairmanship of a USO committee, but said he would help out.

The Klamath Jockey club was permitted to put banners on the streets advertising the local horse race program.

City Attorney Van Vector told the council there is an ordinance preventing use of cleated tractors on local streets.

Germans Greeted Coldly in Paris, Says Press Writer nazi tank rumbling down the boulevard Des Italiens past the opera.

But the French people paid no attention at all, were no more surprised than if a honking taxicab had been passing.

The streets are full of German soldiers and officers and there has been an invasion of "Maedchen in uniform" girls from Germany garbed in dull gray uniforms and grey silk stockings.

Thoroughly military, these nazi women auxiliaries use neither powder, paint nor lipstick. Their step is brisk and soldierlike.

The famous Cafe de Paris has a big sign "this restaurant is forbidden to Jews."

Maxim's, the mecca of gourmets from the world over, announces that it is open only to its old customers.

The Ecole Pigier, the Cays Academy on the rue Des Italiens and other language schools which in pre-war days taught English now have signs out promising to teach the Parisians German in 60 days.

There's not much left of the famous American institutions in Paris except their names.

The American hospital at Neuilly still is treating a few Americans, some French patients and quite a number of wounded British "Tommys" who are in no hurry to get well. They know when they are discharged from convalescence they will be sent to prison or concentration camps.

One of the directors of the hospital, the American-born General Adelbert De Chambrun, sleeps in the hospital beds to protect it properly.

His wife, the former Clara Longworth of Cincinnati, sleeps in the American library on the rue De Theoran to guard its books.

Newsboys still hawk their papers in front of the Cafe De La Paix at the Place De L'Opera but no longer can one step up and buy the latest London editions or the Paris Herald. The Paris edition of the New York Herald-Tribune has folded up.

Woman Fails to Remember Loss

NEWPORT, May 26 (AP)—Mrs. William Jefferson of Newport doesn't know what it is all about, but she believes she's $5 ahead on a case of mistaken identity.

Last week she received the bill and a note from Waynesville, N. C., where she lived as a young girl. The note read, "please accept this. It took it from you when we were children."

There was no signature and Mrs. Jefferson has no idea who sent the money and no remembrance of any such occurrence.
