TODAY'S dispatches indicate that Italian forces have been landed on the eastern end of Crete, thus putting the British-lireck defenders between the jaws of a vise.

The Germans are reported to have entired Side Bay harbor.

have captured Suda Bay harbor, giving them a landing place for troops and heavy equipment troops and such as tanks.

A REPORT from Italy asserts that hundreds of little Greek sailboats loaded with German troops have been safely of Italian warships, indicating (if true) that the British fleet has been driven from Cretan

This indication is strengthened by a dispatch from Alexandria yesterday saying that a part of the British fleet had arrived at the British in the base there.

BARRING a miracle (and miracles have been few and far between in this war) Crete is lost to the British. What remains is merely a matter of time and detail.

HOW did it happen? It is the same old story, beginning in Poland and running through all the German conquests since: The Germans had ALL THE AIRPLANES THEY NEEDED and their opponents didn't.

THIS writer, having no inside sources of information, can only guess. But this seems a fair guess as to what has hap-pened in Crete:

The British, lacking air strength, undertook to defend Crete with their Mediterranean navy (supported, but INADE-QUATELY, by the air arm of the fibet.)

The result is history.

The ADEQUATE German air force first landed enough para-chute troops to seize a foothold. Then it drove the scanty British air force from the island, mean while pouring in reinforcements steadily from the air.

After that it attacked and apparently mastered the defending British fleet, which was inadequately supported in the air.

War Aims Announced

the current single year of training was accordingly anticipated.

Britain announced her war aims today for the first time, adopting President Roosevelt's "four freedoms" and adding the stipulation stern military and political measures must prevent Germany from the chief executive, an informed official suggested it would be seen disclosed on the question.

In the light of the threat to American security pictured by the chief executive, an informed official suggested it would be again challenging world peace.

These aims envisage a postwar reconstruction of the world by the British empire, the United States and the other "free nations' unravaged by the war.

The government has given no hint of the nature of the measures which would be used to curb a German challenge, but both Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Prime Minister Win-Eden and Prime Minister Win-ston Churchill before the war were among the strongest sup-porters of the league of nations. It appears logical, therefore, to believe any peace settlement which they dominate would aim at providing an effective system of collective security backed by armed force.

Post War

Britain's aims were disclosed by Eden in an address at the by Eden in an address at the Lord Mayor's mansion house. They apparently were timed to follow up President Roosevelt's statement of American foreign policy and to answer widespread demands in America—particular-ly among non-interventionists — that Britain make known her post-war plans. Eden presented this outline of British war aims: 1. Peace based on President Roosevelt's ideals of freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom from want and freedom from fear—enunciated in his January address to congress.

2. "Political and military terms" to put Germany in a po-sition where she never again could challenge world peace or become "the worst master Eu-rope has yet known."

3. Establish social security abroad as well as at home, through coordinated efforts of Britain, the dominions, the United States and the nations of South America—stabilizing currencies, feeding starving peoples and averting fluctuation of em-ployment, prices and markets.

4. Extension of this new "moral order," as opposed to Adolf Hitler's "new European order," to the Far East once the Chinese-Japanese conflict has been liquidated.

5. British support of the inde-

This belief, reported to be en-tertained in high quarters, was said to be based on information that business interests apparently were gaining influence in the government and might Tokyo eventually prevail over the mili-tary party which led Japan into the war with China and into the axis alliance.

The president made only brief references to the Pacific in his address Tuesday. # LONDON, May 29 (UP)—Imperial forces in Crete are in a desperate if not irretrievable situation after losing Suda Bay under smashing dive-bomber and land attacks. The loss allows the arrival of German "panzer" units by sea, qualified observers ad-mitted tonight.

As fresh nazi shock troops advanced against defenders ex-hausted by 10 days of hand-to-hand fighting, public attention was turned to the defenses of Cyprus, the British island in the far eastern Mediterranean. It generally is conceded to be Adolf Hitler's next stepping stone in his mammoth scheme to drive Britain from the Middle East.

Blasted from their only first class anchorage at Suda Bay, the imperial forces commanded by Major General Bernard C. Freyberg were reported fighting desperate rear guard actions against overpowering axis land and sea forces.
