BETWEEN TWO STOOLS.

Bryan Pulls Back When It Time To Go Ahead, and Vice Versa. If the "consent of the governed" is to be taken literally, without limitation or qualification, then Jefferson's purchase of the Louisiana territory was an act both of corruption and rapine, and our whole Indian policy has been a monstrous outrage and tyranny.

The difference between ourselves and Mr. Bryan is that we would accept them while he would reject them. He puts himself in the attitude not only of an obstructionist, but of a reactionist. In our judgement he makes a great mistake. First, he makes a mistake in proposing to abridge the onward march of his country.
