Oregon gave McKinley a plurality of 4,014.
 Lake county gave McKinley a plurality of about 250.
 President McKinley will have 292 votes in the electoral college. Bryan will have 155.
 The American people have abundant reason for gratitude on the approaching Thanksgiving day.

Mr. Bryan has refused an editorial position with a salary-attachment of $10,000 a year, on a Denver afternoon paper. He says he will stick to Nebraska and continue his political war.
 Whether Kentucky has a democratic majority or not it is usually delivered over to the democracy, and this year proved no exception to the custom. Democratic leaders of that state have a way of managing elections, that is truly unique.

Senator Pettigrew, the popocrat who ruled the politics and policies of South Dakota for nearly a quarter of a century, has met his Waterloo in the shape of overwhelming defeat in that state. He has passed with Bryan into the common and inoffensive state of inno euous desuetude.
 Greer rises cheerfully above the avalanche which struck his party, and looks hopefully into the future. It is not learned whether democratic defeat will reduce him to poverty and want or not. Anyway, we presume by the exercise of rigid economy he can manage to scrape together enough to eat and wear and thus avoid great personal distress.

Nebraska has given McKinley a plurality of 7,500. Four years ago the state gave Bryan a plurality of about 14,000. The late election shows a majority opposing Bryan in his own precinct, his own town and his own state. Nebraska also elects republican state officers and a republican legislature, which latter obstructs the senatorial aspirations of Bryan or his associate statesmen. Thus, Bryan and Bryanism are effectually shelved.

The billingsgate and missiles hurled at Gov. Roosevelt during his campaigning tour had the usual effect in swelling republican victories. A vast majority of American voters will not tolerate interference with free speech and while there is such a great multitude to maintain order and freedom, there need be no fear that control of the government will either pass into the hands of riot and anarchy or despotic wealth and tyranny.

The so called arid region of South-eastern Oregon will be as rich as the Salt Lake valley in Utah. The railroads that are headed that way will bring people, and the people will see that the land is irrigated. The result will be, alfalfa fields and abundant grain and vegetables and fruit crops, taking the place of the sage brush, and civilization following solitude. The Oregon Legislature can afford to encourage this sort of development. So can the federal Government. There is an empire to be carved out there.—Salem Statesman.

The late election seems to demonstrate anew the political axiom that talk does not win votes. Citizens listen to be entertained, not to be influenced. Speakers can tell them nothing they do not know. Voters go to campaign rallies for the same reason that they go to minstrel or dog shows, and their opinions are not molded at political gatherings. They read at their leisure and think when they eat and when they work. They get more knowledge of facts through magazines and newspapers than spellbinders can impart in a lifetime of political lectures. Public speakers served their day when the statesmen were the politicians. Now every citizen is a politician unto himself. He gets his impressions from print, and they are more accurate than they could be under any other circumstances. Too often speeches are mere appeals to prejudices. It has come to be impossible to review political causes in their whole significance, as voters have learned to require them treated, in a single discussion or in several. The result is that public opinion is less sensitive to momentary influences and more steadfast than ever before.—Oregonian.

At a cross-roads school house on the South Dakota prairies, the following question was recently debated with much fervor and eloquence, each contestant showing ability and wonderful depth of thought: Resolved: "That the human biped who masquerades as a sage and giant mind by the trick of looking wise and by seeming to choke down gems of lore and experience, thus deceiving and misleading people as to his caliber and usefulness, is less superficial and less a chump and more likely to become great and renowned than the glib biped who prates incessantly and incoherently and who is never able to create the faintest suspicion that an idea is lurking behind his perpetual hurricane of words." A competent corps of judges decided in favor of the affirmative. The winning side contended, among other things, that the silence of the first biped in dispute is laudable, not afflicting or excruciating anyone with empty words, and that his lustrous glow of specious erudition could hurt no one, that if he could delude people into believing him to be a master-mind, it is satisfying to all as though he really were one, and that if gratifying, it would be utterly harmless to exalt and worship such an insensate clump of animate matter. The affirmative likened the negative's favored biped to a heavily stocked frog pond in the propensity of breeding distress and despair, and maintained that he could not win attention and approval outside of a feeble-minded institute. On the other hand, the negative held, in brief, that it was best for a biped to perpetuate a reflection of the inside of his head, regardless of how little there may be in it, and that by so doing there was no possibility of working a deception, or of there being a hidden thought or motive of evil, which might lead to the injury of his fellows. In respect to winning fame and usefulness, the negative referred to Senator W. V. Allen of Nebraska, who gained renown and carried his party's point by talking fourteen hours uninterruptedly in the U. S. senate without saying anything.

FAMOUS BERRY PATCH OF KLAMATH COUNTY.
 [Oregonian.]
 Along by the side of Crater Lake and Pelican Bay, in Klamath county, there is a great wonder which is visited by thousands of people annually, that is seldom mentioned and but little known outside of Southern Oregon. The great huckleberry patch of Oregon is situated 75 miles from Klamath Falls, in a northerly direction, and eight miles from the famous Crater Lake. At least 3000 people visited the place this year, and from 3000 to 5000 people journey thither every year. They do not visit it as sightseers, but strictly with a business motive.
 In earlier times it was the home of the bear and the great storehouse of the Indian. Here the different tribes met on friendly terms and picked the berries and dried them for winter food. Now the bear have almost entirely disappeared and the red man and the white man meet on equal terms and pick the fruit from Nature's own orchard.

 This remarkably wild huckleberry patch covers an area of land 20 miles long and from four to five miles wide. The bushes average from three to five feet in height, and are literally loaded with the fruit every year. A failure in the crop has never been known. The "patch" lies along the summit of Huckleberry mountain, a peak of the Cascades, at an altitude of about 7000 feet. The berries are blue-black in color, about the size of a tame cherry and are of delicious flavor.
 Besides the Indians and whites of Southern Oregon, the inhabitants of Northern California, and Western Idaho flock to this place every year. The berries are picked and canned or dried on the ground, and taken home ready to be stored for winter's use. In early days the Indians dried them exclusively, but now they have learned the white man's ways.
 During the huckleberry season the mountain resembles a city. From 3000 to 4000 people are camped about the place, and the numerous campfires send up their smoke by day and shoot farther their light by night and the mountain is made merry for 20 miles by the shouting of children and song and merrymaking. The berries come to ripen in August and picking continues until snow flies, generally the latter part of November. One person usually picks five or six gallons a day, which when sold brings $1 a gallon in the towns. Most of the berries, however, are put up by private families for home consumption. The berries here picked and saved annually run up into the hundreds of thousands of gallons.
 Visits to the sections are marked by both pleasure and profit. Every kind of amusement is carried on. Music, dances, Sunday schools and preaching. Besides berry-picking there are other features of attraction. Although the bear is practically driven from this, his desirable home, a number are still killed every season while stealing in to make a meal from the luscious berries. Deer are plentiful and hundreds of them are killed annually. Fishing is good in all of the lakes and mountain streams, and the place is an ideal spot for the romantic pleasure-seeker as well as families who desire to replenish the larder for winter.

 There is no pleasure in life if you dread going to the table to eat and can't rest at night on account of indigestion. Henry Williams, of Bonanza, Ind., says he suffered that way for years, till he commenced the use of Kodol Dyspepsia Cure, and adds, "Now I can eat anything I like and all that I want and sleep soundly every night." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure will digest what you eat. J. L. PADGETT & SONS, KENO.
