It is reported that Candidate Bryan has concluded to start at his home town, Lincoln, Neb., the publication of a weekly paper, of which he will be sole editor and proprietor. It is safe to predict that his paper will not sustain the policy of the administration.

In their zealous efforts, workers for charitable institutions occasionally slip up against a revelation of fact which makes them reflect and wish they had investigated before proceeding. We have in mind an instance, wherein cakes were being solicited for a church social. In their circuit, the solicitors found one victim in the midst of a washing. She was asked to contribute and cheerfully replied that she would endeavor to do so, though she had three or four more washings to finish that week—a fact which was new and astounding to the solicitors. Thus, though unostentatious poverty, like unostentatious wealth, is laudable, people are thereby often deceived and apt to fall into errors that are afterwards keenly regretted.

The convention of Federation of Labor at Louisville places this declaration on record among others: "The right to quit work is an inviolable prerogative of every American workman." Though omitted by the convention, it is equally fair to say that every American workman has an inviolable prerogative to work and should be allowed to exercise it without being intimidated or assaulted by those who have thrown up a job and don't want others to accept it. Also it is as fair to say that every American employer has an "inviolable prerogative" to cartload or eliminate his help. The fact is, labor unions, as well as their capitalistic employers, go to unreasonable extremes, and the interests of neither are conserved by such arbitrariness. People are always glad to see labor squeeze big pay out of rich corporations, but in doing so they want to see them keep within the bounds of reason, order and law. Labor and capital are helplessly dependent on each other and hence they should get together and settle their differences amicably, and thus contract, rather than widen, the already large breach between them.

OPPORTUNITIES IN OREGON.

[Oregonian.] Oregon is ready to welcome right royally immigrants who come hither for the purpose of homebuilding. A mild climate, fruitful soil, vast timber and immense resources; a country unexcelled for dairying, stockraising and the smaller branches of agriculture; wide wheat areas, a widening market, looking towards at least three points of the compass, and plenty of land suited to the varying desires of the settlers—surely there is an invitation in these to the thrifty, industrious man, which, when accepted, assures him of a welcome that, for neighborliness and hospitality, cannot be excelled in any country and among any people under the sun. A good place to come to, Oregon is also a good place to stay away from. Much depends upon the man and the equipments in family, means and purpose with which he comes. Barehanded, thriftlessness will not thrive in Oregon, for the same reason that keeps its possessors on the poor list everywhere. But for men who believe that the world owes them a living only as they exact payment by levy of legitimate industry and prudence upon opportunity, there is a place and a welcome here, and, as the years go on, a comfortable competence.

TREATY WITH INDIANS.

A Washington correspondent in Sunday's Oregonian announces that an agreement has been made with the Klamath Indians whereby they are to cede their long-disputed lands to the United States. Inspector McLaughlin, who was sent to Klamath county to treat with the Indians, concluded the agreement October 24 last. Those in a position to know say the treaty will be speedily ratified by congress.

It will be readily appreciated that this settlement and consequent opening to market of 621,824 acres of land, of which 350,000 acres are rich in excellent timber, will prove of great weight in the development of Klamath county. The correspondent reports the stipulations of the treaty as follows:

"By the first article of the McLaughlin agreement, the Indians cede to the United States all claim and interest in all parts of their reservation lying between the boundaries described in the treaty of October 14, 1864, as surveyed in 1871, comprising a total area of 621,824 acres.

"In consideration of the cession of these lands, it is provided in section 2 that the United States shall pay and expend for the Klamath Indians the sum of $537,007, being at the rate of 86.36 cents per acre. It is understood that $25,000 of this sum shall be paid in cash, pro rata, to each man, woman and child belonging to the Klamath or other tribe under the jurisdiction of the Klamath Agency, within 150 days after the date of the ratification of the agreement; and the sum of $350,000 shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to be to the credit of the Indians, and shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which interest shall be paid to the Indians annually, per capita, in cash; and the remainder, after the payment of the legal fees of attorneys having duly approved contracts, shall be expended for the benefit of the Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under the requisition of the Indians, through their agent, in the drainage and irrigation of their lands and in the purchase of stock cattle for issue to the Indians, and for such other purposes as may best promote their welfare. It is provided, however, that the beneficiaries whose allotments will not be benefited by the irrigation system constructed under this provision shall not bear any of the expense of such irrigation construction, and shall, as nearly as practicable, receive an equivalent value of the stock cattle or other articles contemplated; that each beneficiary may receive his or her apportionable share of the benefits of this provision, and in addition to the interest of the fund deposited in the Treasury, the Secretary may expend for the benefit of the Indians, including reasonable cash payments per capita, not to exceed 10 per cent per annum of the principal fund upon a majority of the male adult Indians of the agency petitioning for the same."

In reference to the timber resources of the excluded strip, the correspondent quotes Inspector McLaughlin: "Inspector McLaughlin reports a large area of heavily timbered country, covered largely with yellow pine, sugar pine, cedar and fir, which is capable of producing an excellent quality of lumber. The merchantable timber in the excluded portion of the reservation along the Cascade Range covers some 350,000 acres. This timber, while now of little value, owing to the inaccessibility, will become valuable in the near future by the construction of railroads. The inspector regards $2 50 an acre a fair average value for the lands in their native state, exclusive of the lava and rocky portions, which are valueless. There are also many acres of arable land, which already possesses considerable value. Taking into consideration the 29 years that the Klamath Indians have been deprived of these lands, together with the value of the valleys, meadows and heavily timbered portions, the inspector most heartily indorses the price fixed upon said land by the Boundary Commission in 1866, namely, 86.36 cents per acre."

The Klamath Indians have waited thirty years for the recognition of their rights and it is believed a settlement will be no longer deferred. To insure the early ratification of the agreement, a bill for that purpose is submitted, and its early consideration urged. This settlement will prove beneficial to the Indians and to Klamath county generally.

"In England a man of science discovers an antiseptic dressing for gunshot wounds, another discovers a star, another the mysteries of the deep sea sounding, and these are lifted presently to be peers of the realms. With us the scholar, the man of science, the inventor, the pioneer in commerce or the arts, delay and distinguish them too often only by disputing their achievements or by appropriating without rewarding them for the products of their genius.

"If material wealth be the end of being, if accumulation be the worthwhile of buying of Legislatures be the final and highest distinction possible to modern man, then we must need look them in the face. If the country in which you and I live and call civilized has undergone what is nothing more than a gigantic revolution, hugely aggressions of capital which have practically taken from the hands of the individual the independent disposition of his labor and have introduced into his existence such paralyzing uncertainty as to better his coming fortunes and his future, and gradually widened the breaches that separate classes from classes, and competitions of life, increase the elements of perplexity and uncertainty as to how great multitudes may obtain them—all these are features of our modern situation, full of danger.

"For one, I have no hope that any mechanism of legislation, any system of socialism and any scheme of agrarian distribution or taxation will in the remotest degree remove them. The church of God must go up, must stay up upon a much higher plane than that."

FOR TWO STATES.

[Pendleton Tribune.]

The capital of the state is too remote from Eastern Oregon, and it costs too much money, and too much time, for the people of this section to be able to afford to go to Salem to attend to their business. As a consequence very few Eastern Oregon people visit the state capital. From this it follows that the Willamette Valley dominates legislation, appointments to office, appropriation bills and, in short, the government of the state. The bosses and the lobby throng to Salem from Portland and other near-by towns; and Eastern Oregon has no influence at the state capital worth mentioning.

Just think of it for a moment. The two Federal Senators are from the Willamette Valley and both Congressmen are from Western Oregon, while The Dalles, from which Representative Moody holds, is nominally in Eastern Oregon, it is really a suburb of Portland, and is entirely dominated by Portland interests. Yet Eastern Oregon is nearly half the state in wealth and population, and in 10 years will exceed Western Oregon in both.

And what has the eastern half of the state got to show for its burden of taxes? Well it sees Portland and other Western Oregon communities arbitrarily cut down the valuation of their taxable property by a score of millions to escape taxation. Eastern Oregon gets a pittance of $15,000 or $20,000 for its Western Normal School. What else? A few thousand dollars for exterminating wild animals. What else? Any Supreme Court Judges? Not exactly, but it does get a deputy Supreme Court clerk at a salary of about two-bits a day. What more? An insane asylum? Well, hardly. What besides? Well, if you can think of anything else, please telephone the Tribune, and we will print it.

Space will not permit mention of many other reasons for division, such as natural boundary lines, differing climate, different pursuits and the diverse temperaments of the inhabitants of the eastern and western sections.

WORSHIP OF MAMMON.

[Oregonian.] NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 7.—Bishop Potter, in an address last night at New Haven, said:

"I choose this subject because of its paramount importance," he said. "Divorce, crime and corruption in all our cities have one root, the lust of money. The one eager, dominant hunger which salutes us from one end to another of our broad land is the passion, the hunger, the greed of gain. Challenge what method you will in the complicated web of our industrial, political or social life and you will find the question of gain behind it. Listen to what scandal you may in the haunts of politicians, in the camps of soldiers, in the halls of fashion, the final standard in the whole business may be expressed by a dollar mark. Listen to the talk of children as they murmur and compare their citizens. Hear a group of young girls, whose fresh youth one would think ought, in the matter of their most tender and sacred affections, to be as free from sordid instinct as from the taint of a goddess emblem, and you will find that they have their price and are not to be had without it any more than a Circassian slave in the market of Baghdad.

"Go where you may, talk with whom you will—with clergymen estimating the promises of a field for spiritual labor, with women rating in claims of other women upon their social recognition, with heads of great universities paralyzed with the fright lest the indiscretions of some plain-spoken professor who tells his age the truth in an hour when it sorely needs to hear it, shall cut down the revenues of the college—it is no matter; the commercial question is at the bottom of it and decides usually all the others.

"We read the other day of a woman at the harem whose attire was a dress made of the skins of unborn lambs. What do you think of such a thing? Is not this a relic of barbarism?"

"The situation, grave and threatening as it is to all that is best in a nation's life, the result of causes that are not far to seek. They are to be found in the spirit of the age, in the conditions of our National life and in the standard of our personal values. We may shout till we are black in the face that we are the greatest and the strongest and the richest nation in Christendom, but there comes a strange awe in the heart as we turn back and read of what kind of stuff the first conquerors to these shores mainly were.
