THE N. C. O. TO LAKEVIEW AND KLAMATH FALLS.

In response to inquiries, we have received this week from a well known and reliable resident of a neighboring county, a letter in relation to the general hope and expectation of railway connection in the near future. In his letter he advances a seemingly well founded theory, but one which we have never before heard mentioned, in regard to the N. C. O. railway, which starting from Reno, Nevada is completed in a northwesterly direction as far as Terro. From Terro it is to be extended to Alturas, Cal. At Alturas the road will divide into two branches, the construction of which will capture the entire business of Southern Oregon, and settle forever all competition over it between San Francisco and Portland.

From Alturas one branch will run due north to Lakeview and will there meet the contemplated road from Burns. Another branch from Alturas will run northwest to Klamath Falls, and thus receive the benefit and business arising from the vast forests of pine in that neighborhood. Both routes are easy, and the business which the two branches will receive by such a union, in lumber, stock, freight, passengers, etc., will at once make the N. C. O. one of the best paying roads in Oregon or California.

It is a plausible theory and based on truth, and one which good business enterprise will at once see the advantage of, and the questions "Will it pay?" or "Is there business enough?" can no longer be used as clubs to break the backs of proposed railroads into this part of the state. The timber alone will pay an enormous income, and when to that is added all the business in passengers and freight of Southern Oregon, the road will be seen to be a royal one for the prosperity of its stockholders. And thus may the great problem of railroad building into this part of Oregon be settled to the mutual satisfaction of owners and patrons.

MISSIONARY REMINISCENCES.

About twenty years ago a number of young men were studying for the ministry in the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, Penn. While rare opportunities for usefulness were not wanting at home for earnest and capable men, still there was a louder call for consecrated talent to go abroad and give the knowledge of the truth to the non-Christian nations of the world. The intrinsic strength of this claim was augmented by the clever and earnest pleas of Rev. S. H. Kellogg who then occupied the chair of Theology in the seminary. He was one of the ablest advocates for the cause of foreign missions in the Presbyterian church. When a very young man he had gone to India and spent a number of years in preaching to the Hindus and Mohammedans. He also wrote a grammar of the Hindi language which still holds its place as the standard work on that subject. His amiable disposition and scholarly attainments rendered him a most valuable missionary. India could ill afford to lose him, but the Master saw that what seemed to be a loss to that country would, in reality, prove a gain. Mrs. Kellogg died, and being left with a helpless family on his hands, Dr. Kellogg was obliged to return home. His remarkable ability soon attracted the attention of a large and important church in Pittsburgh, and from thence he was called to the chair of theology in the seminary in the adjoining city of Allegheny. In this position he had under his tuition some of the brightest and best young men of the church. He lost no time in bringing to bear upon them the claims of the non-Christian world. The results were that a large number of students became interested in missions and a larger proportion than ever before volunteered to go abroad. Among this number we might mention John Kyle, a cousin of Senator Kyle, who went to Brazil and has won distinction there. H. Robinson, who went to western Africa, tried hard to bear up against the climate of that inhospitable shore, and failing to do so returned home in order to save his life. Burning with zeal for this work, he next found his way to Chile, but was soon compelled to leave this field also and return home a disappointed man, no doubt, but one who is resigned to the mysterious Providence that forbids him to labor in a foreign land. He, however, is happy in a home field in old Peru.

Next we notice W. C. Gault—a man of lovable character who found his way to Africa and after a faithful service of about 20 years yielded up his life, a victim to the African fever.

In this connection A. C. Good deserves more than honorable mention. He stood high as a scholar and a preacher. Would have had no difficulty in securing a good church at home, but he, too, sought the wilds of Africa. He brought to the Western world much light on the flora of that country, and above all he taught the way of life to the darkened minds of the people. While on an exploring expedition, fever claimed him and he was cut down in the flower of his young manhood. Few have accomplished more in so short a time. We mourn his loss but are thankful that a farmer boy of Penn. could show such Christian heroism and undoubted capacity in the service of Christ. Space will not allow us to more than mention Willard who spent the best part of his life at Juneau, Alaska. Small space must be given to the Indian missionaries, but we hope to hear from them again. At the time of which we write there were three students who looked towards this ancient and renowned country as their sphere of labor, namely: J. C. R. Ewing, G. W. Pollock and J. M. McComb.

Much had been said of the unhealthfulness of that climate, and as the people looked upon the verdict, their verdict was as follows: Ewing is a strong man and he will endure any climate, even that of India. Let him pass. Pollock also gives every promise of being well in the tropics. McComb, however, cannot live there and we predict that he will die or return home as soon almost as he sets foot in India. The result, however, was otherwise. Pollock after a heroic struggle with the climate found that he could not live in India and returned home. We find him preaching in West Virginia. Ewing remained about six years when he, too, broke down and was forced to come home for a season, although he since returned, and is now one of the most celebrated and successful missionaries in the foreign field.
