DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure dealiness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

So Many Qualifications Are Asked of Intending Emigrante that All But the Most Persevering Become Discouraged and Remain Where They Are.

While the stringent regulations now governing emigration to Siberia have abolished to a great extent the disorder and abuses of the old system, they have entangled the whole process in a network of bureaucratic formalities, and the preliminary steps which must be taken by every intending emigrant are enough to make all but the most resolute desist. Before making any movement at all the emigrant must seek the advice of the local authorities and obtain a certificate of his suitability and capacity. In the Eye of the Beholder.

If one needs any assurance that beauty is largely in the eye of the beholder. he has but to mentally review the married women of his acquaintance, and reflect that even the plainest of them is charming in her busband's sight. It's a very good thing, too, if we consider were the only sort it was considered possible for a lady to have. The girl who didn't possess one tried to make herself believe she had, anyway, while the maid with an uncompromisingly big mouth just brooded over it in eflence and tried to be patient under her affliction. A mouth is not considered beautiful simply because it is small in these more enlightened days, but to the contrary the good-sized one with wellcurved lips is looked upon as at once more beautiful and more full of cl.aracter than the Cupid's bow sort.

As to evebrows! Well, we've gone through a perfect revolution regarding them. The old-time novelists considered curved evebrows the only sort allowable in good society. If a young woman hadn't curved eyebrows and an astonished expression, she wasn't exactly thought a black sheep, but she wasn't looked upon as an ornament to the family as was her crescent browed sister. Now, the straight eyebrow's the thing and she who hasn't it swears she has and defies any one to disprove her assertion.

Grecian noses have given place in favor to retrousse ones, golden hair to brown, and delicate figures to the athlette sort.

But we're ready to declare each new fashion in good looks is the best, so perhaps after a while we'll be cultivating arched eyebrows again and going back to the days when fainting spells were only the outward and visible sign bring forth?

Think of one woman writing sevenyt-one books!-a library in itself. John Strange Winter (Mrs. Arthur Stannard) is the lady, and her latest novel, "The Price of a Wife," is her seventy-first book. She has kept in the front rank of novelists ever since she attained sudden popularity with "Bootle's Baby," in 1885.

A group of studies of James Bryce in history and jurisprudence has been in the press for some time. There are two volumes, and the contents of these have been composed at different times, extending over many years. While the studies are very diverse, a common thread runs through a number of them. This is a comparison between the history and law of Rome and the history and law of England.
