Cancer has been attributed at one time or another to the consumption of tomatoes, salt and arsenic, or, rather, contributing causes. A correspondent a short time ago wrote to the London cancer might be caused by eating watercress, because he had found freshwater shrimps and some worms in a specimen of this vegetable which he had purchased. The letter to the Chronicle has given rise to a somewhat animated discussion, and among others who took up the matter was George Pinkham's advice and medicine. R. If it be granted that cancer is of parasitic origin, then might not the germ be taken into the system by means of eating raw vegetables? Dr. Lyons, of Buffalo, some time ago made investigations into the relative frequency of cancer among the different nationalities of that city, and found that the malady was most frequent among the German population, notorious for consuming uncooked vegetables in large quantities. more subject to cancer than the rest such were found to be the case in other parts of the world, a strong a priori argument would be established that there is a decided relationship between

FOE OF THE RATTLESNAKE.

Reptiles of a Different Species Kill Them Off by the Thousands. Every summer I sojourn among the nountains of Jackson County, not far from my home," said Ben P. Hunt, a prominent newspaper man of Huntsville, Ala., at the Riggs House, "When I first went there some years ago I stood in mortal dread of the rattlesnakes which were said to infest the region. The particular momenta on which my log cabin stood had a reputation as the habitat of hummerable rattlers, and every morning when I went forth to shoot squirmen I fearned encountering some of the dangerous

"In all the years of my visits to the mountains I have never yet seen a live rattlesnake, but a number of them after they were slain by some of the mountaineers. The natives do not stand in much awe of the snakes, for they know of a sovereign remedy-a certain oil that has never yet failed to cure a person after being bitten. Every countryman in that mountain keeps a bottle of this oll at his home and one hears many wonderful stories of the cures it has wrought.

"But a worse enemy to the 'rattlesnake than his human foes is a member of their own family-the black snake. I have come across several reputable men in the mountains who have witessed with their own eyes these snakes in deadly combat. According to their unanimous testimony, it is always a fight to the death and the black snake ever comes out victorious. In fact, it is purely a one-sided duel. The rattler is no sort of a match for his wily opponent, who glides round and round his clumsy antagonist till he gets either dazed or tired out. Then at the opportune time the black jumps on the rattler, catches him by the back of the neck and enfolds his helpless victim, crushing him, boa constrictor fashion, intil life is extinet.

"Numbers of mountaineers who have een these strange encounters say they never knew a rattler to escape." Washington Post.
