TENDENCY OF OCCUPATIONS.

Commercial and Industrial Pursuits Have the Call. That we have become in the last wenty years & commercial and industrial people and have ceased to be a people with whom agriculture is the redominant industry is indicated by the census report on occupations, recently published. The following table shows the proportion of all those in gainful pursuits who were engaged in the five principal classes of occupation in 1880 and in 1900:

Agricultural pursuits . 43.29 85.79 9.50

It will be seen that in 1880, while 45 per cent of those employed were enwere engaged in trade and transportation, manufacturing and mechanical pursuits, but that in 1900 less than 36 per cent were engaged in agriculture. while almost 41 per cent were engaged in manufacturing and commerce.

extinction of agriculture. It merely indicates a change in its relative importance. The number of persons actually engaged in agriculture increased between 1880 and 1900 from 7,714,000 to 10,382,000 and the number is likely he has gone to meet his"—another if our vast irrigable domain is thrown to increase for many years, especially open to settlement and is settled by bona fine homeseekers. With the growth in the commercial and industrial population there is bound to be a growth in the number of those engaged in the business of growing their food supply. In a country such as this, with its broad areas of fertile land available for industry, and with its vast resources of the raw material of industry and of manufacturing power. agriculture is bound to demand the services of more and more men. To make this clear it is sufficient to say that in 1880 there were engaged in commerce and the mechanical industries 2,250,000 persons, who were fed "I had such pains in my back that I by the labors of 7,714,000 agricultur-

well cared for. This has been done through the activity of Mrs. John J. Hoff, who for several years has stirred up the energy of the American Christian residents of Paris and has produced wonders. On the opening day the sunlit drawing and dining rooms were crowded with American residents who listened to a bright discourse from Mrs. Hoff, a witty speech from John Wanamaker, who has done so much for meetings for American students are so well attended, and a prayer by Rev. Dr. Thurber; then tea and lemonade were served, after which every one ran up the two flights of stairs to look at the cheerful bedrooms.

The preamble to the constitution says that the members of this association are actuated by a desire to stimulate interest in the religious development of young women in Paris, to improve their intellectual, social and physical conditions, and to do this there will be classes in French, German, lectures, social and Bible meetings and teas, besides physical culture.
