IT'S A MODERN MIRACLE.

How the Coachman Keeps His Tall Hat On in the Windiest Weather.

There are three things I have never yet been able to clearly understand, says a writer in the London Graphic. The first is how a train keeps on the rails; the second how a well-staircase endures so long without perpetually collapsing; and the third, which is the most difficult to comprehend of any, how a coachman manages to keep his hat on.

In the stormiest weather—when most hats are taking flight—when it is blowing fiercely and raining vindictively, you may see a coachman driving a pair of spirited horses and both hands so occupied that they could not touch the brim of his topper, and yet he never loses it.

How is this? Does he use some adhesive composition to make it fast to his head, has he an invisible string fastened under his chin, has he some extraordinary method of developing his occipito frontalis so as to render it equal to the occasion, or does he follow the example of the fair sex and run a hairpin through his back hair? I am sure I cannot tell how this may be. All I know is that in the midst of a blinding deluge and a terrific hurricane you will find his hat securely planted on the top of his head as if it grew there.

JAPANESE DEATH SPIRIT.

To the Soldiers of the Mikado No Dishonor Is Greater Than Failure.

Within the human frame is a power that passes the understandings of boasted scientists of the twentieth century, and the supreme ideal of the Nippon samurai, the yamato damashi, is a spark that does often wake that power, mysterious, unknown, nevertheless real, writes Adachi Kinzoku, in Leslie's Monthly. The Nippon soldier dies when his life is under the cloud of dishonor, as he sees it. In your way of looking at things you might be superior enough to say to him: "Dear fellow, you are mistaken; there is no dishonor in being prisoners of war." And you might be right. Permit me to remind you of one solid, historic act—your genial and good-natured attitude toward life has never yet produced men of whom, as the circular of the 13th of April, in Gen. Kuroki's camp, has it, is expected the accomplishment of the impossible. Moreover, to the samurai this life is nothing; fulfilling a duty to his own country and to the emperor is everything. No dishonor is greater to a samurai than the failure in accomplishing his work, in the discharge of his duty toward his country. In the code of the samurai honor it is written that none would survive dishonor.

SOME GORGEOUS INSECTS.

Beautiful Butterflies and Luminous Beetles Found in South America.

An Englishman, who lives in British Columbia, was in New York visiting his brother, and one evening the conversation turned upon the wonderful South American insects, relates the Tribune. "I wish that when you go back you'd send me some of those gorgeous butterflies and luminous beetles and things," remarked the New York brother. "I'm interested in them and it must be so easy for you to get them. I suppose you've caught some fine specimens, haven't you?"

The man from Georgetown smiled. "Catch them," he exclaimed; "you don't fancy we trouble ourselves to chase those things. If we wanted any, all I should do would be to call a coolie boy, give him a 'killing bottle'—one with poison in the bottom, you know, to kill them as soon as they're in—and tell him that when he brought the bottle back to me full of fine insects I'd give him ten cents. Of course, a lot of the specimens are broken from being captured and kept in that careless way, but you can always find some perfect ones, which make the thing worth while."

SEWING BEES IN COURT.

An American Sewing Machine Proves a Source of Delight to the Chinese Empress.

A French officer who, returning from Manchuria, visited Peking, where he was presented at the imperial court, tells that the dowager empress of China, who had been given an American sewing machine, is so delighted with it that she has decided to order one for every lady at the court and intends to have regular sewing bees in the palace, to which daughters of all the highest mandarins are to be invited and try their skill on the wonderful machines.

The empress is at present even more interested in sewing machines than in the magnificent mausoleum which she is having built for herself and on which she has spent nearly $500,000.

She told the officer that she had no intention of dying for some time yet and that she feels as well as ever. She will continue to be the actual ruler of China until the war between Japan and Russia is ended, but she will then retire and spend the rest of her days in the palace at Eho, which has been almost built over and greatly enlarged to suit her taste.

The Ville Lumiere.
Paris! Paris! No other city knows how to amuse itself. The passing of time, elsewhere so pitiless, here brings merriment; but a succession of feast days, which follow so rapidly and closely that one has hardly time to count them.—Journal des Debats.

TOOTH BRUSHES IN SCHOOL.

English Writer Would Require All Pupils to Be Furnished with Them.

"In the political economy of nations the toothbrush is of much more importance than the sword, and tooth powder is infinitely more important than gunpowder."

So writes Mrs. John Lane in the Fortnightly Review, in the course of a plea, both amusing and very sensible, for greater care of the teeth than is customary in this country.

The English have not the habit of going to the dentist; money paid to him they consider wasted—there is nothing to show for it.

They still have teeth out rather than stopped (filled) as being cheaper, and when they are all out they replace them on too slight provocation by what American humor calls "store teeth."

Nor are the English superstitious, and their complacency, which upholds them in more important things, inclines them to believe that if their fathers muddled along with bad teeth, so can they.

If, as it is said, bad teeth are a sign of the degeneracy of a race, then are the sturdy English in a very bad way.

The English, Mrs. Lane points out, used to be always caricatured on the continent as possessing very prominent front teeth. Now they often have no front teeth at all.

And the worst of it is they do not seem to mind.

"If I were one of the powers that be," concludes Mrs. Lane, "I should require all board schools to furnish their pupils with toothbrushes and tooth powder, and I would open the morning session with a general brushing of the teeth. Not only that, but I would have a dentist attached to each school district whose duty it would be to attend to the children's teeth free of charge."

KISSING ADVERTISEMENT.

Paris Restaurants Wherein the Cashier Pays Peculiar Premium on Checks.

In many of the European cafes of the cheaper order it is the invariable custom to print the daily menu on the napkin provided for the guest, so that when the latter desires to study the bill of fare he has to raise his serviette from his knee in order to do so.

But perhaps the most extraordinary custom in connection with restaurant life, says a writer, is that which obtains in a certain little cafe in the suburbs of Paris, where every customer whose bill amounts to one shilling or over is entitled to receive a kiss from the very attractive young lady who acts as cashier to the establishment.

So used has the damsel become to the osculation routine that she goes through it without the slightest reticence, looking upon it purely as a matter of business, and it is reported that the proprietor of the restaurant is more than satisfied with the result of his curious device for attracting patrons.

Another enterprising restaurateur has instituted the practice of making a present of a box of Havana cigars every New Year's day to those patrons who have been pretty regular in their attendance at his establishment during the preceding year.

DON'T USE HARD BRUSH.

The Frequent Cause of Unsound Teeth in Young Persons, Says a Dentist.

"In spite of all that is printed nowadays about the care of the teeth," said an experienced New York dentist, according to the Press, "we should have to go out of business if we depended upon the patronage of men and women who have passed the prime of life. I is a mistake to assume that most of the false teeth are made for old persons. I venture to say that scarcely a day passes that a patient well in the sixties does not come to my office for some slight treatment to an almost perfectly sound set of teeth."

"I have frequently treated men and women past 50 who never had a tooth out, and but one or two slight cavities that required filling. On the other hand, we are repeatedly called upon to make artificial teeth for very young persons. I attribute it to the use of the hard toothbrush, which is a comparatively modern invention. The use of a hard brush, even occasionally, is a great mistake. The softest kind of hog's bristles makes the best toothbrush."

WINK AND BLINK.
Will you wink, blink your life and nervous energy away, rather than wear glasses? Will you force your eyes overwork, neglect them, when they are for help? Abuse them year after year, until at middle life you are compelled to seek aid, perhaps to find your vision impaired beyond entire repair. A pair of glasses at the proper time will save you a world of trouble and preserve your vision for old age, when you begin to rely more and more on printed books or newspaper for companionship.
