smacks of the days of the reformation.

People of City Island Know the Day Under Peculiar Name-Early Comers Happy.

There is a certain Sunday in May that the people of City Island know as Fisherman's Sunday," but it is not marked with red letters on the calendar, and to a plain everyday citizen of New York who happens up that way Sunday in May or June, or July it would seem that he had come on Fisherman's Sunday, says Bertha Smith, in Four-Track News. To be BEGINNING WITH JUNE 18th AND UNTIL most sure of it he must start not later than six o'clock in the morning for it is not only the early bird that gets the worm, but it's the early worm that gets the fish, and the early man that gets the boat to cast out the worm that gets the fish. Six o'clock is none too early in May, and it is almost too late from June to September to fing a sun that is not ready to pelt you with hot rays; and so, for the few minutes between that hour and the time when the first train for Bartow pulls out of the uptown station, every street car, and every elevated train contributes its mite-a man, or two, or a halfdow. Later in the autumn a later start can be made, to High Point. A few years ago when they were operin one of the New England cities, a middle-aged lady, who had never seen them before, entered a car one day that contained only two other people, seating herself as near the conductor as possible, relates the Philadelphia Ledeger, and when he had collected her fare she spoke to him and said:

From Bonfires in the Main Living Rooms to the Dangerous Suction Draft.

In the primitive fireplace the smoke was supposed to pass through an opening in the roof, but failing in this, save Country Life in America, it escaped, with the occupants, through the handiest side opeing. The middle ages set the hearth against the wall and built a projecting hod of brick or stone above it to carry off the smoke. Gredually the fireplace was built with two Lanking jamba which supported it, and thus the present form of fireplace was evolved. As the armorial bearing was a prominent feature of decoration in these times, its empodiment in the treatment of the firemportant fireplace became the central feature of the room. At a later period the fireplace was let into the wall, as is the common form to-day. At first the fireplace opening was of small dimenn the theory that the larger opening meant an increase of heat, it was enlarged to great size. Then, when the tendency to draw children and furniture up the chimney or let in all the outside cold through the enormous opening found little hindrance in the iron doors employed to remedy the defect, they went back to the smaller opening as a relief.
