Indian Basketry

Of all the Indians' work for ornament or utility the best known and most highly appreciated is the weaving done by the women.
 There were many kinds of aboriginal weaving, such as the weaving of blankets and garments out of the cedar "wool." This substance was obtained by pounding the inner cedar bark with a huckle until it was soft as wool. Blankets and garments were woven from wool obtained from dogs and from the mountain goats. These were sometimes adorned by adding feathers to the loose wool. Nets for fishing and for duck-swinging were woven from willow and cedar twigs. Mats of various sizes and designs were woven of strips of cedar bark. But the great object of the modern search is the Indian basket, which probably does embody the highest ideal of Indian art.
 There are two prime classes of Indian baskets from Alaska. One of these is the soft and delicate wallets of grass woven in the finest and most regular stitches—the Atitu basket or wallet. The other type is coarser in material, but quite as regular in stitch and beautiful in design. It is called after the chief village of its production—the Yakutat basket. There are many varieties of baskets from Alaska, but these two are the chief and best known types.—Edmond S. Meany in The Pacific Monthly for June.

QUARANTINE.

Klamath Falls, Or., June 18, 1906
 In as much as there has been considerable criticism regarding the manner in which I have conducted the campaign against the contagious diseases epidemic in this county, the criticisms as I understand are that cases were not reported to the common council, which is most true. I do not understand it to be my duty to report contagious diseases to that honorable body.

Second. Cases were not quarantined. I hold they were. The word means to detain or isolate on account of suspected contagion; the manner of which the health officer determines by the disease, the environment and means at his command. As we have no pest house great hardship may be worked on people and cases arise which are difficult to quarantine. Thos, Parker, M. D.

FARM AND GARDEN

IMPROVING A FARM HOUSE
 How to Change a Low, Poorly-Ventilated Building into a Really Attractive Abode.

About the country are thousands of plain, one-story houses, similar in appearance to that shown in cut. Such houses have low, poorly-ventilated chambers, and are very unattractive in appearance. They can be made much more comfortable to live in, and much more pleasing to the eye, at small expense, by the plan shown.

The wide dormer window will greatly improve the chamber, giving air and light from another side of the house, while enlarging the chamber room. The addition of the veranda is found to add greatly to the appearance of the house.

THE SAME HOUSE IMPROVED.

and will give much added comfort in hot weather. An open veranda at the back will often be found desirable. Whatever makes one's home more attractive and more comfortable, increases by so much its selling price, if one should wish to sell, for buyers are quick to appreciate these features. So the improvement of the farmhouse becomes a profitable investment, though improvements ought not to hinge upon this, for a man owes it to himself and to his family to make his home as pleasant and as comfortable as possible.—Farm and Home.

PRESERVING FRESH MEATS.
 If Canned According to Directions Beef and Pork Can Be Kept for Many Months.

With the following methods the housewife can keep meat from butchering time fresh and sweet for months. The meat should not be long exposed to the air, but used as soon as it is cut and firm. Slice the steak or frying meat, sprinkle the bottom of quart fruit cans freely with salt, pepper and the least perceptible dash of pulverized saltpeter and borax; borax is used freely in most packing houses. Put in a layer of sliced meat, sprinkle with salt, pepper, etc., as before; fill to within an inch of the top with layers of seasoned meat, pressing each down very firmly, leaving no air spaces. Season the top layer loose freely and fill cans to the brim with softened, not melted, lard; hermetically seal, put in paper bags, keep dark and cool. Meat so canned in February was sweet and nice in August.

Out boiling and baking pieces into small sections, pack in large stone crocks, press down and season as before, but more freely, filling all interspaces with bits of meat dropped in salt cover with lard to the depth of an inch; will keep until May or June. Slice side pork, fry and season as if for present use and pack in large jars, covering as before. Will keep the year around and taste like fried fresh pork. Well seasoned sausage packed in the same manner will keep until early summer. Slice ham from the bones, remove the rind and the cork, rough edges of the slices pack solidly in jars and cover an inch deep with lard. Will keep indefinitely. Whenever meat is taken from any of these jars immediately warm the lard, strain and return to the jar.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

ALL ABOUT THE FARM.
 Drive slowly the first hour after a meal.
 Light and dryness destroy fungus growths.
 Thorough grooming cleanses the hide as well as the hair.
 Drooping deprived of the urine loses the larger share of the potash they contain.
 It is always ruinous to dispose of any branch farming when prices are unsatisfactory.
 Generally the smaller the farm the better the cultivation and the greater the profit for the expenditure.
 The dirt and sweat which accumulate on the horses during the day should never be allowed to remain on over night.
 There are two things a farmer can never have enough of—one is feed, the other is manure. Feed makes manure if fed to stock on the farm.
 If the cow has to travel over a large surface and takes a good deal of time to fill her stomach, the time and energy expended will cause a reduction in the flow of milk.—American Tribune.

Time to Select Corn.
 The fall of the year is the time to select the seed corn, and this should be stored in a place that will keep dry, and yet not evaporate its moisture too much.

Valuable Points in Plowing.
 Farmers use the cultivator for a plow; that is, they cultivate deep, with the object of loosening the soil between the rows. If the ground is to be broken up, the plow is the thing to do it with, but two inches is sufficient depth for cultivation. Grass and weeds should never be allowed to grow to a height to demand "plowing" with a cultivator. Keep the top soil loose and never allow grass or weeds to more than sprout above ground. Deep cultivation frequently does harm in disturbing the roots of the plants grown as a crop.
