Grabbed at Sight

The people of Portland were cheated out of a shipment of Bonanza Creamery butter that started to that city this week. It got as far as Ashland, where D. Perozzi happened to see it, and he the house to enter a carriage they bought it at once, paying a higher price heard a disturbance in the park. Mr. than could be had in Portland. Perozzi is perhaps one of the best judges of but- two of the elk fighting. One of the ter in the state, and he says that the Bonanza butter cannot be beaten. This is due not only to the perfect manner of its production, but also the ideal condition prevailing in this county for the production of fine milk.

The success of the creamery is assured on his hind legs, with his forefeet on a for the demand for the output is rapidly rall of the fence, uttering meanwhile increasing. Already over five hundred a sound like the moaning of a human dollars has been paid out to the farmers being. The elk remained in this ataround Bonanza, and this will be in- titude until shot. creased as the market for butter is opened up.

Pay Half

The owners of the property abuttin the "hump" on Main street have agreed to pay a portion of the cost of bringing don? this part of the street to the required grade. The property on the north side bled behind the bar. of the street will be assessed $2; that on the south side $1. It is possible that the street car tracks will be raised about eighteen inches, thus reducing the cost of the grade. It is estimated that the amount agreed upon to be paid by the property owners will meet about one half of the cost, the balance to be paid out of the general fund.

A FAMOUS CEMETERY.

Campo Santo as a Burial Place Has No Equal In the World.

The peculiar arrangement, the well disposed shrubbery give one the impression of an artistic garden rather than a cemetery, for there is little to the modern cemeteries of our country. Truiy it is a wonderful sight, with its great colonnades and its groups of statuary, and even if one has not the morbid curiosity of many who find it pleasurable to inspect the burial places an hour or two in this solemn precinct, where sculptors, principally natives of Genoa, have works which would make any one famous. Laid out in the form of a huge square, the center is planted with shrubs and flowers, and here the poorer classes are buried, each grave being marked with a small stone and a lantern of fanciful design hanging at either end. In the lofty corridors of marble which extend around the entire square are the tombs and monuments of the wealthy and noble of Genoa. The corridors are about fifteen feet in width and are lined on either side Co. Supt. Very curlous to foreign eyes do the figures look in their faithfully reproduced dresses of long ago. Here one may see the chignons of the sixties, boys in sailor suits and men in frock coats. Many of the figures and groups are very beautiful, and the work is executed with much delicacy of expression. So might easily mistake them at a short distance for living persons.-Harriet Quimby in Leslie's Weekly.

His Pet Elk Killed Him.

Travelers in Missouri passing along the highway one mile south of Fayette may see a lonely tombstone in a grove of trees near the road. It rests above the solitary grave of a man who met a peculiar death many years ago. In 1856 H. B. Watts, an early settler, owned a beautiful park of twenty acres near Fayette. In this preserve he kept four buffaloes, five elk and fifty deer. One of the elk, known as Jim, was a pet. The young children often rode on his back, and he was supposed to be harmless. Mr. Watts and his family prepared to attend a Methodist camp meeting one September morning. When they came from Watts entered the inclosure and found combatants was Jim. When he tried to separate the infuriated animals he was attacked by the pet and killed. It is said that a few minutes afterward the animal seemed to be seized by remorse. He retired to a distant corner of the park, where he raised himself
