A Communication

Where a county as large as ours posessing so many undeveloped resources, both for the seeker of wealth and of pleasure, possessing healthy virile or-oratic tickets, nineteen are residents ganizations for the development and exloose to their work, it may not be amiss close to the city, however, that he might to point out a few objects not unworthy of their pent up energies.

There are two very plausible reasons lakes, pearling streams. grassy mead-ows and bushy hills, nearly all fairly well stocked with fish and game, for the use and pleasure of man.

And yet her work in parts was not complete as though left for man to fin-ish, either in whole or in part. Not in creation, but in the stocking of her preserves with the animal life to which they seem especially adapted.

The writer recently stood upon one of the peaks of our western range of mounsport and recreation for the angler, were tenantless so far as the finny tribe was tion paid to any office holder, concerned, just waiting as it were to be H. L. Holgate, of Ropans stocked with rainbow trout, others as Swan Lake, Aspen and Round Lakes, with their shallow vegitable covered bosoms, awaiting the advent of the cat-fish and the musical bull frog. The vast stretches of tule and swamp that should be the ideal home of the muskrat, have never known this cunning house builder's skill. And its former denizens of the furry skin are fast disappearing with no hope of their ever being replaced, unless by the muskrat. In the early settlement of this county the spring time was resonant with the calls of the myriads of water fowl, the mating call of the prairie cock, the cur-lew and the plover, while the air was vibrant at eve tide with the whirr of wings as the lowls sought their nightly feeding grounds or their roosts.

Today while we have a fair supply of water fowl still left, their numbers are sadly decimated by the pot hunter and the nest thief, but our upland birds, the sage hen, the prairie hen, the curlew and plover, there remain a scattering remnant of sage hens only.

Could not our Commerciai and other bodies procure several score of the prairie hen and partridge of the Middle West, with perhaps a few Bob White quail, and turn them loose under the protection of our game wardens to mul-tiply and restock our depleted ranges? Surely the conditions now, with the large grain fields to glean and the straw been the portion of this county during stacks to feed on in winter, offer condi- the past two years tions more favorable than ever before for upland birds.

Therefore, less are not numbered this task was made the more difficult, and it is to be hoped that when the next directory is issued it will have contained therein the street numbers, the council in the meantime having made provision therefor.

These deer, gregarious in their habits, would collect in large herds in the fall of the year and travel to the lower hills and sage plains to winter. Often many thousands would be in a single herd, ror of conditions here and strangers who and when the heavy winter storics covered their feeding grounds would seek shelter in the deep rocky canyons where they could escape the storms and find shrub on which to live. The other reason advanced, and which probably is the correct one, is that the farmers of Klamath county are so pros perous and so busy with money making. that they have no desire or time to bother with a political office. H. L. Holgate, of Bonanza, returned Saturday evening from Corvallis, where he has been visiting his father who has been quite ill. Mr. Holgate states that he will enter the race for the nomination for joint senator. His friends have been strongly urging him for some time, and as he had partly promised they feel justified in insisting that he allow his name to be used

This will make the senatorial contest a three cornered fight, which is never a sure bet until after the election. According to statements of friends of the three candidates, Holgate claims Crook county, Willits is sure of La'e, but the friends of Merryman are not troubled with modesty. They claim Crook and

R. A. Emmit has appointed K. North as assistant postmaster and Mrs. John Hamilton as clerk to serve under him when he takes the office. The location of the office will remain the same as at present, having been leased to the Government for that purpose.

Mr. Emmitt will probably not take office until the first of the month as Mr. Murdock has offered to run the office until that time. This will mean a great saving of work for both men as otherwise there would be a double set of reports to be made out. Mr. Murdock has sughim with the work.
