NEW WAY OF FERTILIZATION.

Recent discoveries in regard to the nature of soil fertility have suggested the employment of various novel fertilizers. Manganese has been applied with success, and now Mr. Rigaux has published an account of a series of experiments, made in Belgium, in the employment of magnesium as a fertilizer for cereals, potatoes, beets and leguminous crops. The magnesia was applied in the form of kainit, or Strassfurt potash salt, which contains 14 per cent of magnesium sulphate. Rigaux had previously proved that the quantity of magnesia in arable land is smaller than is generally supposed, and that the surface soil always contains less magnesia than the subsoil. Magnesia is found in plants in considerable quantities, constituting, for example, 13 per cent of the ash of wheat and 8 per cent of the ash of oats. Hence, if no magnesium fertilizer is applied, repeated cropping must exhaust the magnesia of the soil, to the detriment of succeeding crops. It appeared probable, therefore, that the application of magnesia would produce a beneficial effect. This theoretical conclusion was fully confirmed by the experiments. The yield of sugar beets was increased by 4500 pounds to the acre, and the percentage of sugar was not diminished. With grains the increase varied from one-seventh to one-fifth of the total crop. On barley magnesia had the peculiar effect of diminishing the proportion of nitrogenous constituents. This property is of advantage to brewers, who find great difficulty in making beer of good keeping qualities from barley rich in nitrogen. The crop of potatoes was increased from 21,000 to 27,000 pounds per acre and was rendered immune to the attacks of mildew fungus, which infested the part of the field on which no kainit was used. Finally, the yield of hay from natural meadow land was increased from 3000 to 4150 pounds per acre.

As a result of the good progress made by the bureau of animal industry in co-operation with state authorities in the eradication of sheep scab, an order has been issued by the secretary of agriculture, effective on April 1, removing the federal quarantine on account of this disease from Montana and from portions of North Dakota and South Dakota lying south and west of the Missouri river. The states and territories remaining in quarantine for this disease are Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas. The infection in parts of this area is so slight and such good headway is being made toward its eradication that the bureau hopes to be able to release further territory from quarantine during the present year.
