AN OPPORTUNITY FOR KLAMATH

VERY few of the people of Klamath Falls realize the vast power and influence which is being wielded by the Central Oregon Development League in the upbuilding and development of Eastern Oregon. The publicity from the meetings of this organization has done more to attract attention and secure recognition and assistance for the Eastern part of the state than any other one thing.

It was the influence of the League and its members that made it possible to persuade the state legislature, which has only thirteen representatives from Eastern Oregon, against forty-seven from the Western part of the state, in the lower house, to appropriate nearly a half million dollars for the Columbia Southern project in Crook county. It also secured an appropriation of $50,000 for investigating the resources of the state, which is of particular benefit to the undeveloped sections of Eastern Oregon. The appropriation of $25,000 for agricultural extension was another important bill to Eastern Oregon interests, which was passed through the support of the members of the League, as was also the memorial to congress, asking for an extension of time for payments on government projects, and which undoubtedly has had considerable to do in determining the favorable attitude of the secretary of the interior.

If the people here could only realize what the meting of the Central Oregon Development League in Klamath Falls in August meant for this city and for the entire Klamath country, every man and woman would begin at once laying plans to make this one of the greatest meetings of the League ever held.

Klamath Falls as a meeting place has a great advantage over other towns in Central Oregon. After traveling hundreds of miles through vast stretches of sage brush, mountain and practically undeveloped country, the large number of visitors to Klamath Falls can be shown our beautiful valleys in a comparatively developed stage. In addition we have better accommodations in every respect as well as unsurpassed mountain and lake scenery, which are bound to create a lasting and favorable impression. It remains for the people of Klamath Falls to welcome these visitors in a manner befitting the importance of the gathering.
