Karl Marlantes awarded Clarkson University honorary degree

Author Karl Marlantes, a Seaside High School graduate, was awarded an honorary doctor of science degree at Clarkson University's 123rd Commencement on Saturday, May 7. The degree was awarded for "answering this country's call to duty; for his bravery and compassion in war; for his work developing sustainable energies and their infrastructure; for documenting the experiences that illuminate the realities of war and for giving voice to veterans and helping them on their paths to recovery; and for his service to this nation and to humanity."

Marlantes was a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford. He served as a Marine rifle platoon commander in Vietnam, receiving the Navy Cross, Bronze Star, two Navy Commendation medals for valor, two Purple Hearts and other medals. After his deployment, Marlantes earned a master's degree in philosophy, politics and education. He has worked as a business consultant for various international energy companies and lived in India, England, Singapore and France.

He published two books, "Matterhorn" (2010) and "What It Is Like To Go To War" (2011). Marlantes writes candidly about his struggle with severe post-traumatic stress disorder and has been a vocal advocate for veterans suffering from the disorder.

In his writing, Marlantes tries to explain why it is vital for society to understand what it asks of its young people when sending them to war. He explores how the nation might better prepare military personnel for war's extremes, and how to help them find peace afterwards.
