

Chamber: Owners of Thai Me Up take top honor

Event cancellations included Pouring at the Coast, Fourth of July fireworks, Seaside Beach Volleyball and the Hood to Coast.

Thursday night's event emphasized the positive.

CMH Urgent Care Seaside, which opened in the Seaside Outlets last January, was winner of the chamber's Community Impact Award, delivered to the business deemed to have made a positive impact on Seaside.

The Retailer of the Year, presented to Cleanline Surf, recognizes a business which has been proactive to changing market trends, embraced new technology or ideas, strong relationships with employees and customers, Heman said.

Sea Star Gelato won the Rising Star/New Business Award.

The Legacy Award, presented to members of the community who have been part of the chamber and business community for at least 10 years, went to Knutsen Insurance. "It is both a testament to the member and their commitment to service," Heman said.

Doug Barker was named Volunteer of the Year. "The volunteer of the year is someone who really dedicates a lot of time, energy and effort to what we do as an organization for our community," Owen said. "They're motivated, driven — these are people who aren't looking for the limelight. They're in the trenches working on a regular basis."

Keith Chandler of the Seaside Aquarium received the Byron Award, delivered to a leader in community service. "Keith's there even for events he has nothing to do with, whether it's the car event, or the wine walk or the flower baskets," said chamber member and volunteer Gini Dideum in presenting the award. "Any time an organization in town asks for a donation, he's always there giving generously. Every organization needs a Keith Chandler."

Despite the pandemic and its impacts, local businesses did step up, took on the challenges and did the best they could, Heman said. "Congratulations to all of you. Everybody should get an award for being able to manage your businesses in this last year. Thank you again everybody for doing your part in this awesome community."

Goals: Plans include resiliency master plan, water protection which means in less than a decade, so you don't want to take this too lightly," City Councilor Tom Horning, a geologist, said.

A resiliency master plan is moving along at a good pace, City Councilor Randy Frank said.

A communications tower will add redundancy to radio systems between the north and southern parts of the county.

Horning and Frank will team to guide completion and implementation of a source water protection plan to protect old growth forests. "An older forest will give up 50% more water in the summer than a young forest," Horning said. "One of the things is how to accomplish this. It also enhances the forest for wildlife and salmon species in the river."

Barber and City Councilor Dana Phillips will lead succession planning for City Manager Mark Winstanley, who announced his retirement in 2022.

Barber and Montero plan to update the City Charter as needed, a significant process that will require a vote by citizens. "Tita and I are looking at city ordinances, reviewing, revising and updating those city ordinances," Barber said. "It's a huge process. We're also revising policies for committees and commissions, what they can and do."

Montero asked councilors to provide regular updates. "I'd like to have a monthly regular report in, so we can keep all of us apprised, and our community toward what progress we are making," she said.

Campus: Overall campus construction is expected to reach $131M building as well as Pacific Ridge Elementary. It also serves portions of Seaside.

Overall campus construction is expected to reach $131 million, Henry said, presenting a chart indicating budget and district payments. "The blue line is what we projected. The green line is our current path. We're getting very close to our revised budget has been. As long as we can keep the green line below the blue line, I think we'll be doing OK."

At Pacific Ridge Elementary, construction is close to completion, with some woodwork, information technology and final furniture items.

The wetland area will be replenished with willow trees and plants, with an emphasis on animal-resistant plantings.

"We had some plants in the storm water ponds which unexpectedly are favored by elk," Henry said. "They are being replaced at no cost to the district. We've also had some of the same problems as everyone else in town with hoof tracks, grass clumps pulled up, and 'elk-duds.'"

The blue line is projected spending and the green line the current path.
