The Seaside City Council paid tribute to America's war veterans last Monday night.

At the City Council meeting, Seaside Fire Chief Joey Daniels read a proclamation in honor of those who have risked their lives to preserve the country's liberty.

"They have shown their heights to which Americans can rise when inspired to do so," Daniels said. "Our courageous troops in Iraq, Afghanistan and around the globe have earned their place alongside previous generations of great Americans. They've selflessly made tour after tour, in conflicts spanning a decade."

Long after leaving the uniform behind, many veterans continue to serve the country as public servants and mentors, parents and community leaders, the proclamation reads.

The proclamation honors Nov. 11 as Veterans Remembrance Day, encouraging Americans to recognize and remember the valor and sacrifice of veterans through appropriate public ceremonies and private prayers.

Councilors unanimously approved the proclamation. Mayor Jay Barber was absent.

On Nov. 11, Seaside Chamber of Commerce ambassadors will display flags at local businesses, putting the flags up in the morning and taking them down at the end of the day. Businesses seeking flags may contact the chamber.

American Legion Post 99 will observe the day with an early bird dinner for members. The public is invited and nonmembers are invited at $10 a plate. Dinner of pork loin, mashed potatoes and vegetables will be served from 4 to 7 p.m.

The Vietnam War Veterans Memorial, with the names of 111 Seaside war veterans who served, stands at the south edge of Seltzer Park in the Cove.

Samaritans, Seaside Aquarium lend assist to sea turtle

Seaside Signal

A 50-pound olive ridley sea turtle was found 1 mile north of the Peter Iredale shipwreck in Hammond by Samuel K. Gardner. The turtle appeared dead at first, Seaside Aquarium staff reported last Thursday, but shortly after finding the animal, Gardner realized that it was still alive and contacted the aquarium.

Gardner was joined by Alec and Corinne Reeves, who just happened to be walking on the beach.

As the tide continued to come in and the surf raged up the beach, they decided that it would be best to get the turtle to a more secure location. Usually, it is best not to move a sea turtle until responders arrive but in this case it was necessary if the turtle was going to survive. Gardner and Alec Reeves carried the turtle more than a mile and were able to meet up with the responding staff from Seaside Aquarium.

The turtle was quickly loaded up and taken to the aquarium for evaluation.

It was one of the most active sea turtles staff at the aquarium had dealt with in a long time, staff reported, an uplifting sign. Thirty minutes after the turtle arrived at Seaside Aquarium staff was informed that not only was the Oregon Coast Aquarium ready and prepared to take in cold, stunned sea turtles, but that they had another olive ridley sea turtle en route.

The second turtle was found on the southern Oregon coast. Staff from the Seaside Aquarium drove the turtle down to the Oregon Coast Aquarium, one of two licensed rehabilitation facilities for sea turtles in the Pacific Northwest. The other facility is the Seattle Aquarium.
