

Hurrying and waiting are both part of the film-making process

Pregnant?

Giving your baby a healthy start in life is the most important, longest-lasting gift you can give.

Let us be your helping hand in finding the essential services and resources available to you and your baby. We can help with:

- Referrals for prenatal care, hospital delivery and follow-up
- Answers to questions about breastfeeding, infant care and other concerns
- Assistance with funding sources (Oregon Health Plan and others)
- Access to community programs (WIC program and others)
- Options for basic life necessities (clothing, food, et cetera)
- English & Spanish spoken

Scenes were filmed at many places around town including the high school, the Union 76 station, Joy Theatre and Rock Creek by the swimming pool. Other filming was done near Scappoose-Vernonia Hwy, in a rock quarry near Scappoose and in the Columbia Gorge.
