

Support for Smokefree Workplace law

Oregon's Smokefree Workplace Law has strong support after its first year. In a recent survey, 76 percent of Oregonians say they support the law.

The law requires most employers to ensure smokefree workplaces and display "No Smoking" signs. Exceptions include bars and taverns, bingo parlors, tobacco stores, bowling alleys and hotel and motel rooms designated as smoking rooms.

With more than 100,000 workplaces in Oregon, the state has received only 128 actionable complaints. As a result, these businesses have received official follow-up letters from DHS. To date, no citations have been issued and no employer has been fined. "Follow-up is getting good results," said McGee. "We're pleased that businesses are complying quickly."

Employees and the public may confidentially report violations of the law by calling toll-free 1-866-621-6107, or by alerting their county health department. Local agencies will investigate and pursue violations of the law. A business found to be in violation, faces fines up to $1,000 in a 30-day period.
